REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

[Revised Advertisement.]

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage, in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets, etc.

The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and half of G; Volume IV. latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O; Vol. VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol. VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and, as such, will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

QUESTIONS.

The Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM asked:—

I. Whether the effect of the assessment rates adopted for the revision of the land-revenue settlement in Assam will result in the enhancement of as much as 100 per cent. on a large proportion of raiyats' holdings under "ordinary" cultivation?

II. Whether any limit of total enhancement on individual holdings is prescribed, as in Bombay?

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS replied as follows:—

"The Government of India are not yet informed as to the extent to which assessments of holdings will be raised, or whether in any case they will be doubled. The Chief Commissioner was instructed that it might be desirable to impose a limit on the assessment of individual holdings, but no report has yet been received as to the limit he proposes to adopt. The limit on individual holdings in Bombay is 100 per cent., and lower limits are laid down for villages and districts. I do not think it possible that the new land-tax on any individual holding in Assam will be doubled, though I believe that the assessment on some particular lands may be increased to that extent. The doubling of the rates on some individual holdings or on particular classes of land need not necessarily result in an equivalent increase of the assessment on any considerable area. If, however, it should be found in individual cases, that the immediate imposition of the full enhancement deduced from fair rates would be unduly severe, the system of progressive assessments now usually adopted in other Provinces in similar circumstances will doubtless be followed in Assam. That is to say, a moiety or other fraction of the enhancement will probably be taken during the first years of the term for which the settlement is made, then a larger fraction for a few more years, and only after that the full assessment."

FINANCIAL STATEMENT FOR 1893-94.

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR said:—"In accordance with the rules made under the Indian Councils Act of 1892, the annual Financial Statement must be explained in the Legislative Council of the Government of India and may be discussed by the Members of that Council, each of whom is entitled to receive a printed copy of the Statement.

"A printed copy of the Financial Statement has been supplied to each Member of the Council, and I shall now proceed to explain the general financial position of the Government of India; such discussion of the Financial Statement as may be considered necessary can take place subsequently.

"In the explanation which I propose to lay before this Council I shall confine myself almost entirely to Imperial Revenue and Imperial Expenditure, and I shall neither take up matters of minor importance nor attempt to deal with Provincial and Local Finance, my special object at the present moment being to convey to the Council and to the public a correct outline of the general financial position of the Government of India: those who wish for further and fuller information will find it in the body of the Financial Statement.

"I shall deal, as is usual, with the transactions of the Government of India under the three following heads:—

(1) The Accounts of the financial year 1891-92 which have been finally closed.

(2) The Revised Estimate of the financial year 1892-93 which ends on the 31st instant.

(3) The Budget Estimate of the coming year—1893-94.

"The explanation I am about to give is printed as Part I of the Financial Statement, and where Revenue or Expenditure is mentioned, it should be understood that Imperial Revenue or Imperial Expenditure is meant, unless the contrary is stated in the context.

"The financial position of the Government of India, at the present moment, is such as to give cause for apprehension, and I shall be obliged, in the explanation I am about to lay before this Council, to go back a short way into the history of the past in order to bring out more clearly the nature of the difficulties with which we have to contend and the causes to which they owe their existence. It will not be necessary for this purpose to go back further than March, 1891, the month in which the Budget Estimates of the financial year 1891-92 were issued. This is the latest year of which the Accounts have been finally closed.

"Section I.—Accounts of 1891-92.

"When the Budget Estimates for the year 1891-92 were being framed, just two years ago, the rate of exchange was taken at what would now seem the excessive figure of 1*s.* 5¼*d.* the rupee; the surplus shown in the Estimates was Rx. 115,600, and practical equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure was secured.

"It was explained in the Financial Statement issued in March last that from a financial point of view the unfavourable incidents of the year 1891-92 were (1) a fall in the average rate of exchange of the year to 1*s.* 4·713*d.*, involving an increase of the net Expenditure under Exchange by Rx. 782,200, (2) a considerable increase in Military Expenditure, chiefly on account of expeditions, and (3) a falling off in Land Revenue owing to scarcity; on the other, or favourable, side of the account there was (1) a very large increase of Railway Revenue, (2) a substantial increase of net Opium Revenue, and (3) a satisfactory growth of Ordinary Revenue other than Land Revenue.

"It appeared at that time, March, 1892, that the changes for the worse which had occurred during the year 1891-92 would slightly outweigh the changes for the better, and Expenditure was shown in the Revised Estimates of 1891-92 as being somewhat in excess of Revenue; at the same time it was anticipated that some improvement might occur at the last moment and that the Accounts of the year when finally closed would show a surplus. This hope has been realised, and the Accounts of 1891-92 have closed with a surplus of Rx. 467,000—a not unsatisfactory result, even though the larger part of that surplus is due to a payment which it was expected would be made to the War Office in 1891-92 having been postponed to 1892-93; the provision made on this account in the Revised Estimates of 1891-92 was £240,000. The amount actually paid in 1892-93 was £208,000 and the finances of the year 1891-92 have been relieved at the expense of those of the current year.

"With 1891-92 the era of surpluses, I regret to say, comes to an end. During the four years from 1884-85 to 1887-88 there was an aggregate deficit of Rx. 5,039,000. In 1888-89 there was a surplus of Rx. 37,000, in 1889-90 of Rx. 2,612,000, in 1890-91 of Rx. 3,688,000, in 1891-92 of Rx. 467,000, the aggregate surplus of the four years being Rx. 6,804,000. The Revised Estimates of the year which is now drawing to a close, and the Budget Estimates of the year on which we are about to enter, show deficits of considerable magnitude.

"Section II.—Revised Estimate of 1892-93.

"I now come to the Revised Estimates of 1892-93—the year which is just about to close,—and I shall in the first place call attention to the conditions under which these Estimates of 1892-93 were originally framed. The fall in the rate of exchange during the year 1891-92 had been so great that in the Financial Statement for 1892-93 some difficulty was experienced in securing equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure. The fall in the rate of exchange, from 1*s.* 5¼*d.*, the figure taken for the Budget Estimates of 1891-92, to 1*s.* 4*d.*, the highest rate which it was considered safe to take for 1892-93, caused the charge for Exchange to increase by no less than Rx. 1,708,000. We were able to cover this heavy loss and to secure a small surplus of Rx. 146,600 in the Budget Estimates of 1892-93, but it was only a concurrence of fortunate incidents that enabled us to do so. These fortunate incidents were (1) the receipt of contributions to the extent of Rx. 466,000 from Local Governments on revision of the Provincial Contracts, (2) the anticipated growth of general Revenue under the Principal Heads (excluding Opium) to the extent of Rx. 625,000, (3) the anticipated growth of Railway Revenue to the extent of Rx. 606,000 in India, less increased expenditure in England of £51,800, and (4) a substantial improvement under Interest in India owing to our having been able to avoid borrowing for some years, and to our having increased the Paper Currency investment by one crore of rupees.

"The rate of exchange taken in the Budget Estimates of the current year —namely, 1*s.* 4*d.* the rupee—has not been realised. The actual rate of exchange at the present time is unsettled, and at this moment is below 1*s.* 2·5*d.*, and the average rate for the year is slightly below 1*s.* 3*d.*; the net charge for Exchange has increased by Rx. 1,936,600, of which Rx. 1,635,300 is due to the fall in the rate of exchange, and the remainder to increase of sterling Expenditure. Nor is this fall in Exchange the only untoward event which has affected the figures of the year 1892-93; there is also an increase of the net sterling Expenditure in England, amounting to £602,600, and involving, with Exchange at the Budget rate of 1*s.* 4*d.*, an increased burden of Rx. 903,900, and there is an increase in the Expenditure under Army Services in India to the extent of Rx. 515,500.

"The three great causes of increased Expenditure during the year 1892-93 have been (1) the fall in the rate of exchange, which caused an increase of Rx. 1,635,300, (2) increased sterling Expenditure, involving a burden of Rx. 903,900, and (3) increased Expenditure on the Army in India to the extent of Rx. 515,500, making a total of Rx. 3,054,700. As the surplus shown in the Budget Estimates was only Rx. 146,600, and the three causes I have just mentioned increased the Expenditure by Rx. 3,054,700, it will probably be a surprise to most people to learn that the deficit shown in the Revised Estimates is only Rx. 1,081,900, a figure which will no doubt be still further reduced when the Accounts of the year are finally closed. The Budget Estimates show a surplus of Rx. 146,600 and the Revised Estimates show a deficit of Rx. 1,081,900; there has, therefore, been during the year a falling off or deterioration on the whole account of Rx. 1,228,500, being the amount of surplus shown in the Budget Estimates plus the amount of deficit shown in the Revised Estimates. The three great causes which I have already mentioned having been sufficient to cause a falling off to the extent of Rx. 3,054,700 and the actual falling off, everything included, being only Rx. 1,228,500, it follows there must have been an improvement in other directions of Rx. 1,826,200, being Rx. 3,054,700 minus Rx. 1,228,500. I shall explain a little later in what way this improvement of Rx. 1,826,200 was obtained, but in the first instance it will be convenient to state the causes of the increase in sterling Expenditure and of the increase in Expenditure on the Army in India.

"The chief increases in sterling Expenditure in England are £427,800 under Army Services, £123,400 under Marine, £81,900 under Superannuation Allowances and Pensions, and £37,600 under Interest.

"The increased Expenditure under Army was caused by the payment of an arrear charge of £208,000 to the War Office in 1892-93 instead of in 1891-92 as originally intended, and by the adoption of a rule for the payment of furlough allowances and retired pay in arrears at the end of each month instead of in arrears at the end of each quarter. Such a change must, from the nature of the case, add to the total charge in the first year because the allowances are paid sooner than would otherwise be the case, and the amount due at the end of the year is reduced. The same cause accounts for the increase of £81,900 in civil Superannuation Allowances and Pensions. The increase in the Marine charge is due to payments on account of the construction of ships and a dredger, which were not provided for in the Budget Estimates.

"The increase of £37,600 under Interest is due to discount on a sterling loan of £1 300,000 raised during the year for advances to Railway Companies and discharge of Railway Debentures.

"The increased Expenditure of Rx. 515,500 on Army Services in India is due to the following causes:—

	Rx.
Suppression of disturbances in the Lushai Country	60,000
Isazai Field Force	50,000
Gilgit Agency	9,000
Kajuri Kach Force	100,000
Kurram Escort	45,000
Transport charges for supply of Gilgit Agency	78,400
Arrear charges connected with the Manipur Expedition	7,600
Rise in price of food and forage and increase in the number of transport animals to be fed (about)	150,000
Total	500,000

"There were also other increases of charge of minor importance and some decreases of no great magnitude which need not be separately specified.

"I come now to the explanation of the fact that, with an increase of sterling Expenditure involving at the Exchange of 1*s.* 4*d.* a burden on the finances of Rx. 903,900, with an increase in Army Expenditure in India amounting to Rx. 515,500, and with an increase of Rx. 1,635,300 on account of the fall in the rate of exchange, giving in all a deterioration of Rx. 3,054,700, the deficit is only Rx. 1,081,900. In making this explanation it will be most convenient to deal separately with the Opium Revenue, deducting Opium Expenditure from Opium Revenue so as to get the figure of net Revenue. It is at first sight not a little remarkable that an unfavourable Opium crop should, for the present, have had the effect of materially increasing the Revenue and at the same time largely reducing the Expenditure, the total gain in net Opium Revenue in India as compared with the figures of the Budget Estimates being no less than Rx. 971,900.

"In the first place, I may mention that the poppy cultivation failed to a large extent in the cold weather of 1892, so that the sums paid to the cultivators, which sums fall into the accounts of the current year, were greatly reduced in amount, and the total Expenditure in India under Opium in 1892-93 proved to be Rx. 1,593,900 as compared with the Budget provision of Rx. 2,233,900, the saving being Rx. 640,000.

"The knowledge that the crop of Opium was a poor one immediately affected the market, and a rise took place in the price of Bengal Opium. In making our Budget calculations we had estimated the price of Bengal Opium at R1,050 a chest, while the average price actually obtained has proved to be R1,247. If we could have continued our sales throughout the financial year at the figures of the earlier months, the gain from the increased price of Bengal Opium would have been Rx. 1,065,200. As the reserve stock of Opium was running down, this could not be done, and the quantity of Bengal Opium to be sold monthly was reduced from 4,500 chests to 3,642 chests with effect from 1st October, 1892. The exports of Malwa Opium also proved smaller than the Estimate, and than had been the case for many years. Consequently the gross Revenue from Opium exceeds the figure of the Budget Estimates by only Rx. 331,900. As the gross Revenue from Opium increased by Rx. 331,900 and the Expenditure was reduced by Rx. 640,000, the increase in the net Revenue is Rx. 971,900.

"In addition to the great improvement in net Revenue from Opium, which I have just explained, and which, I must admit, is accidental, temporary, and, from a financial point of view, far from satisfactory, there has been a general increase of Revenue under almost every head in the Estimates.

"The total gross Revenue in India shown in the Budget Estimates of 1892-93 was Rx. 65,399,500; the amount shown in the Revised Estimates which are now published is Rx. 66,423,300, being an increase of Rx. 1,023,800. Of this increase I have already taken into account the increase of Rx. 331,900 in Revenue from Opium; excluding the temporary and accidental increase in Opium Revenue, there has been, therefore, during the year an improvement in Revenue of Rx. 691,900.

"There is nothing which has so beneficial an influence on the growth of the general Revenue as timely and plentiful rains and good harvests, and, as India has been on the whole somewhat unfortunate in these respects during the last few years, the increase of Revenue which I have just stated is specially satisfactory, inasmuch as it shows that, although the progress of the country may have been impeded by the occurrence of unfavourable seasons, it has not been stopped or even seriously checked. Nevertheless, the growth of Revenue during the year appears to show traces of the influence of unfavourable seasons. There is not a very remarkable increase of Revenue in any direction, and the satisfactory aggregate increase which has been secured is due to moderate increases under almost all heads, and indicates steady and general improvement rather than unusual expansion.

"The only decreases of Revenue of any importance are Rx. 120,700 under XXIV Exchange, Rx. 76,000 under Customs, and Rx. 34,800 under Interest.

"The amount of Revenue shown under XXIV Exchange depends on the average market rate of Exchange during the year, on the rates fixed by contract with the Railway Companies for regulating certain transactions between them and the Government, on the nature and extent of these transactions during the year, on the extent of Remittances during the year, and on the rate of Exchange fixed yearly for the settlement of accounts between the Indian and the Home Government. Increases or decreases of Revenue under such a head are of course no indication of the general progress or prosperity of the country. The falling off under Interest is due to the fact that the Railway Companies did not overdraw their capital to the extent anticipated, and an increase or decrease of Revenue from interest on advances to Railway Companies has not any bearing on the question of the growth of ordinary Revenue. The falling off in Customs Revenue is due to reduced exports of rice from Burma.

"The principal increases of Revenue are the following:—

Head of Account.	Rx.
State Railways	143,600
Land Revenue	117,800
Salt	104,900
Mint	99,400
Excise	79,500
Irrigation, Major Works including Land Revenue due to Irrigation	69,900
Stamps	60,200
Army receipts	51,100

"As the increase in net Opium Revenue is Rx. 971,900, and the increase of Revenue under other heads is Rx. 691,900, we get a total improvement in Revenue of Rx. 1,663,800. This it will be recollected is the increase in Imperial Revenue, and does not take into account Provincial and Local Revenue, the amount of which has no bearing on the surplus or deficit of the year. I may, however, mention that the increase of Provincial and Local Revenue during the year is Rx. 592,500.

"The growth of Revenue during the current year has, as I have just shown, been satisfactory, and it is hardly less satisfactory that the public Expenditure in India during the same period has, with only a single exception of importance, been kept well within the Budget Estimates. The Budget Estimate of this Expenditure for the current year was Rx. 41,628,500 and the corresponding figure of the Revised Estimate is Rx. 41,341,600, a reduction in the aggregate Expenditure of Rx. 286,900. If we eliminate from the account the decrease in Opium Expenditure of Rx. 640,000, which must be admitted to be accidental and temporary, and with which I have separately dealt, it will be seen that the increase of Expenditure under all other heads has been Rx. 353,100, an increase which is more than accounted for by the increased Expenditure of Rx. 515,500 on Army Services which I have already explained.

"The Expenditure under all heads other than Opium and Army Services is very closely in accord with the Budget Estimates both in aggregate amount and in details and need not be further examined. It will suffice to mention that, excluding Expenditure under Opium and Army Services, there is a small saving of Rx. 162,400, an amount slightly less than the saving which occurs under the Railway Revenue Account.

"The explanations already given, and which I fear may have proved somewhat tedious, place me in a position to sum up in a few words the financial results of the year 1892-93.

"In the first place, we have had a net increase of sterling Expenditure amounting to £602,600, which (taking exchange at the Budget rate of 1*s.* 4*d.*) involves an increased charge of Rx. 903,900. In the next place, we have had increased Expenditure on the Army in India amounting to Rx. 515,500; and lastly, and most important of all, there has been a fall in the rate of exchange from 1*s.* 4*d.* to 1*s.* 3*d.*, involving a net increase of the charge in the columns headed Exchange of no less than Rx. 1,635,300; the total falling off during the year from these three causes being Rx. 3,054,700. To balance this great and disastrous falling off we have, in the first place, the temporary and accidental increase in net Opium Revenue in India of Rx. 971,900; in the next place, we have a satisfactory growth of Revenue under other heads of Rx. 691,900, and we have a slight saving of Expenditure (excluding Army Services and Opium) which amounts to Rx. 162,400. The total improvement is Rx. 1,826,200.

"Our losses exceed our gains by Rx. 1,228,500, and the Budget surplus of Rx. 146,600 is converted into a deficit on the Revised Estimates of Rx. 1,081,900.

"The Final Accounts of each financial year usually, and I may say invariably, show improvement over the Revised Estimates, and I fully anticipate that in March 1894 my successor will be able to announce that the actual deficit of the year 1892-93 is below the figure at which it is now placed.

"However satisfactory this result may appear at first sight, and under all the circumstances of the case, a closer examination of the figures affords ground for apprehension.

"The temporary and accidental gain in net Revenue from Opium will disappear in 1893-94 and the influence of short crops in past years will still further reduce the income from Opium. On the other hand, the loss due to the fall in the rate of exchange will remain, and will increase, because there is at the present time no prospect that the rate of exchange will be as high in 1893-94 as it has been in 1892-93, and the fall will not merely add largely and directly to the burden of Indian Expenditure, but will materially increase the cost to be incurred on account of the British troops serving in India, whose pay is fixed in sterling. On the other hand, we may expect to retain a large proportion of the increase of ordinary Revenue which we obtained in 1892-93, and the causes by which the sterling Expenditure was swollen in the current year will no longer operate.

"The prospective loss exceeds the amount of gain on which we can reckon, and we may say at once, and without waiting to examine the Budget Estimates of 1893-94, that the deficit of the year 1893-94 must exceed that of 1892-93 by a considerable amount.

"Section III.—Budget Estimate of 1893-94.

"In the Estimates of the coming year the total Imperial Revenue in India and England amounts to Rx. 66,648,800, and the total Imperial Expenditure to Rx. 68,243,900, and the deficit is Rx. 1,595,100.

"The announcement of a large deficit will not, I believe, come as a surprise to those who have paid any attention to financial matters during the past year, or who have taken their opinions on the subject from the public Press. I shall now explain the exact influence exercised upon the financial position of the Government of India by the various causes which have come into operation during the last twelve months, and which have resulted in transforming the small surplus of the Financial Statement of 1892-93 into a deficit for the coming year which exceeds one and a half crores of rupees. The immediate and principal cause, as every one knows, is the fall in the rate of exchange, but there are other causes of less importance which also require notice.

"In the explanation I am about to make I shall take as my starting point the Budget Estimates of 1892-93, which showed a surplus of Rx. 146,600, and shall trace the various changes, favourable and unfavourable, which in the course of twelve months have brought us face to face with a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100. For the purposes of this explanation it will be convenient to again call attention in this place to the leading features of the position as it presented itself in March 1892.

"In the Financial Statement for 1892-93 it was stated that the fall in the rate of exchange from 1*s.* 5¼*d.* to 1*s.* 4*d.* had imposed on the finances of India an additional burden to the extent of Rx 1,708,000, being the increase of Exchange on the net sterling Expenditure, in addition to an increase of Rx. 205,000 in the pay of the British Troops, and it was explained that this increase of charge had been met (1) by contributions from Local Governments, (2) by anticipated increase of Railway Revenue, (3) by growth of Revenue under the Principal Heads, and (4) by some improvement under Interest owing to our having been able to avoid borrowing for some years, and to our having invested in Government securities a larger amount of the Paper Currency Reserve. The additional burden thrown on the finances in March 1892 was a very heavy one, and it was only a combination of favourable circumstances that enabled us to meet it for the time. The further and additional burden thrown on the finances at the present time is even greater than that of a year ago and another combination of equally favourable circumstances does not recur.

"In the Estimates of the coming year the rate of exchange has been taken at 1*s.* 2¾*d.*, the approximate market rate of the date on which the Estimates were first compiled. The market rate of the present moment is considerably below 1*s.* 2¾*d.*, but the recent fall appears to be due, to a considerable extent, to misapprehension and panic. In any case it is quite impossible for us to recast our Estimates from day to day in the vain hope of being able to follow the fluctuations in Exchange. It will suffice to say that a drop in Exchange from 1*s.* 2¾*d.* to 1*s.* 2½*d.* would add Rx. 439,000 to the Expenditure. The rate of 1*s.* 2¾*d.* taken in the Estimates, though in excess of the market rate of to-day, is five farthings lower than the rate taken in the Budget of 1892-93, and the additional Expenditure, direct and indirect, for which we have to provide in consequence of this fall in the rate of exchange comes to no less than Rx. 2,229,400.

"The net sterling Expenditure in the Estimates of the coming year is £15,650,300, and the charge for Exchange at 1*s.* 2¾*d.* the rupee is Rx. 9,814,600; if we could have taken Exchange at the rate adopted in the Budget Estimate of 1892-93, namely, 1*s.* 4*d.*, the net charge for Exchange would have been only Rx. 7,825,200, and consequently the fall in the rate of exchange between March 1892 and March 1893 has added directly to the Expenditure of the Government of India the difference between these amounts, or the sum of Rx. 1,989,400.

"The pay of the British Troops serving in India, or in any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, is fixed in sterling, and must be converted into the currency of the country in which they are serving at a rate fixed annually, and intended to approximate to the average market rate of the year. The fall in the rate of exchange to 1*s.* 2¾*d.* has added on this account a further sum of Rx. 240,000 to the Indian Expenditure, causing the total additional charge, direct and indirect, on account of Exchange to amount to Rx. 2,229,400.

"The estimated surplus of 1892-93 was Rx. 146,600, and the estimated deficit of the coming year is Rx. 1,595,100, showing a total deterioration in the year of Rx. 1,741,700; as this sum is less by Rx. 487,700 than the falling off due to the fall in Exchange alone, it will be obvious that, but for the fall in exchange below last year's Budget rate of 1*s.* 4*d.*, the Estimates of 1893-94 would have shown an improvement over those of 1892-93 amounting to Rx. 487,700, and I should now have been in a position to announce a surplus of Rx. 634,300 instead of a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100. An increase of Rx. 1,913,000 (Rx. 1,708,000 plus Rx. 205,000) in the burden on account of exchange, followed in twelve months by a further increase of Rx. 2,229,400 on the same account, the total increase amounting to over four crores of rupees, has imposed a strain on the Indian Finances which they are at present unable to bear.

"I shall now explain in what manner the improvement of Rx. 487,700, to which I have just alluded, has been obtained.

"In the first place, I may mention that the estimated net sterling Expenditure of 1893-94 is less than that of 1892-93 by £95,300, giving, at an exchange of 1*s.* 4*d.*, a reduction of charge to the extent of Rx. 148,900. The details of this reduction will be found in the body of the Financial Statement, and I shall not further notice the question of sterling Expenditure in the present place. There remain for examination the Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure shown in the Indian portion of the Accounts.

"In examining the Estimates of Revenue and Expenditure for 1893-94 I shall deal with net Receipts in the case of Opium and Railways; in other words, I shall deduct the Expenditure from the Receipts, and employ net figures. I adopt this course in consideration of the fact that in both cases the Expenditure is so closely connected with the Receipts, and constitutes so large a deduction therefrom, that to treat the total gross receipts as Revenue would be misleading. I do not consider it necessary for my present purpose to treat any other head of Revenue in a similar manner.

"In the net Revenue from Opium the Estimates of 1893-94 as compared with the Budget Estimates of 1892-9, show a falling off of Rx. 338,400; this is partly due to reduced exports of Malwa Opium. There has also been a large reduction in the quantity of Bengal Opium to be sold, and, though the falling off from this cause will be partly covered by the anticipated increase in the selling price, the reduction in Revenue from the sales of Bengal Opium alone is Rx. 207,000.

"Under the Railway Revenue Account the net Receipts in India have increased from Rx. 6,678,300 to Rx. 6,899,400, or by Rx. 221,100.

"Putting aside for the time the Revenue from Opium and the Railway Receipts, with which I deal separately, the total increase of Revenue in the Estimates of the coming year, as compared with the Budget Estimates of 1892-93, is Rx. 647,700. This satisfactory increase is spread over nearly all heads. The only large item of increase is Rx. 313,500 under Land Revenue, and there are decreases under a few heads.

"The increase shown under Excise is only Rx. 36,500, and it may be well that I should explain that the increase of Imperial Revenue under this head would have been Rx. 104,000 had it not been decided recently to assimilate the Opium Law of Lower Burma to that of Upper Burma, or, in other words, to prohibit the consumption and possession of Opium by Natives of Lower Burma. This change involves a reduction of the Excise Revenue in 1893-94 by Rx. 67,500 and of the Opium Revenue by Rx. 22,500. The further loss which falls on the Provincial Revenues is Rx. 22,500. The loss of Revenue will be somewhat greater in subsequent years, as the proposed change is not expected to come into effect until three months of the next financial year have elapsed, and the reduction of Revenue will, therefore, affect only nine months of the year 1893-94.

"Turning to the Expenditure side of the account, I have to observe that, excluding Opium Expenditure and the Expenditure of the Railway Revenue Account, the total increase of Expenditure in India in the coming year is estimated at Rx. 431,600.

"In explaining the causes of this increase of Expenditure it will be convenient to state the increase or decrease under each Group of Heads ordinarily shown in the Indian Accounts. The following are the increases of Expenditure under each Group:—

	Increase. Rx.
Army Services	686,800
Post Office, Telegraph and Mint	48,800
Grant for Famine Relief and Insurance	42,600
Buildings and Roads	40,300
Direct Demands on the Revenue (excluding Opium)	13,400
Salaries and Expenditure of Civil Departments	10,800
TOTAL	842,700

"The increase under Post Office, Telegraph and Mint calls for no special remarks. It is due to the development of the Departments concerned, and is accompanied by a more than proportionate increase of Receipts. That under Buildings and Roads occurs in Military Works Expenditure: the grant for 1892-93 was below the normal amount. The increase under the Famine Grant is merely a matter of account.

"The small increases of Rx. 13,400 and Rx. 10,800 do not require special notice, but the increase of Rx. 686,800 under Army Services is of more importance. Of this sum, Rx. 240,000 is due to the increase in the pay stated in rupees of British troops serving in India and is caused by the fall in the rate of exchange. This portion of the increase has already been taken into account in dealing with the question of Exchange and may be excluded from the present calculation.

"The following are the principal causes of the balance of the increase in Expenditure on Army Services (Rx. 446,800):—

	Rx.
Provision for the Kajuri Kach Force, the Kurram Escort, and Arrear charges of the Chin and Lushai Expeditions	174,000
Increased Expenditure on Ordnance Establishment and Stores	88,200
Rise in the price of food and forage and increase in the number of transport animals to be fed	70,000
Transport and supply arrangements for Gilgit	30,000
Increased cost of clothing for British Troops	27,100
TOTAL	389,300

"The decreases in Expenditure during the coming year, 1893-94, are as follows:—

	Decreases. Rx.
Interest	233,200
Construction of Railways	118,300
Special Defences	18,600
Miscellaneous Civil Charges	32,400
Irrigation	8 600

"Of the items of decrease, the only one that requires special explanation is that under Interest. Speaking generally, this decrease may be said to be due to the transfer of Rx. 10,792,490 of the 4½ per cent. Loan during the current year to a 4 per cent. loan, thus effecting a saving of Rx. 54,000, and to the continuance of the practice of applying the surpluses of past years to the construction of Railways and Canals, and thus obviating the need for borrowing. On the other hand, there is an increase of the interest charge on increased deposits in Government Savings Banks. The reduction under Construction of Railways is due to the fact that we have no surplus Revenue to devote to such a purpose.

"The final result at which we arrive is that, if we exclude the indirect increase of Expenditure in India caused by the fall in the rate of exchange, and leave out of account Opium Expenditure and the Expenditure in the Railway Revenue Account (for both of which a net figure has been taken), there has been an increase of Expenditure under certain heads in the Estimates of 1893-94 as compared with those of 1892-93 of Rx. 602,700, of which Rx. 446,800 is due to higher Expenditure under Army in India, and that there is a decrease under all other heads of Rx. 411,100.

"I am now in a position to summarise in a few words the causes that have brought about a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100 in the Estimates of 1893-94 as compared with the surplus of Rx. 146,600 shown in the Financial Statement for 1892-93. In the first place, the fall in the rate of exchange has caused increased Expenditure to the amount of Rx. 2,229,400; in the second place, net Opium Revenue is worse by Rx. 338,400, and in the third place, the cost of Army Services in India (excluding pay of British Troops) is greater by Rx. 446,800. The total deterioration from the three causes I have mentioned is Rx. 3,014,600. There is on the other side of the account an improvement in ordinary Revenue in India to the extent of Rx. 647,700, an improvement of Rx. 221,100 in net Railway receipts in India, a reduction in the net sterling charge which reduces Expenditure by Rx. 148,900, and a reduction in Indian Expenditure (excluding Opium, the Railway Revenue Account and Army Services) of Rx. 255,200. The total improvement is Rx. 1,272,900, and deducting this amount from the total deterioration of Rx. 3,014,600 we get a net falling-off of Rx. 1,741,700, which is just sufficient to account for the surplus of Rx. 146,600 shown in the Budget Estimates of 1892-93 being converted into a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100 in the Estimates of 1893-94.

"The figures may be stated in the following manner:—

Deterioration.	Rx.	Improvement.	Rx.
Exchange	2,229,400	Increase in Ordinary Revenue in India	647,700
Reduction in net Opium Revenue	338,400	Reduction in net sterling Expenditure	148,900
Increased cost of Army in India, excluding increase in pay of British Troops due to fall in exchange . .	446,800	Reduction in India Expenditure, excluding Opium, Railway Revenue Account and Army Services	255,200
		Improvement in net Railway Receipts	221,100
TOTAL .	3,014,600	TOTAL .	1,272,900

"Section IV.—Present Position and Future Policy.

"The Revised Estimates of the current year show a deficit of Rx. 1,081,900; the Budget Estimates of the coming year show a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100. The prospects of the future are disheartening because, although the ordinary Indian Revenue grows rapidly, the fluctuations in Exchange are such as to set all calculation at defiance. The increase in Expenditure during the last two years, caused by the fall in the rate of exchange, amounts to Rx. 4,142,400, and the increase of Expenditure due to this cause has not yet come to an end. The heavy fall in the rate of exchange has most seriously affected the position of Government servants not domiciled in India; their case cannot be put on one side much longer, and, as matters now stand, no remedy is possible which does not involve further increase of Expenditure.

"We have, also, to take into consideration the possibility of the United States stopping their purchases of silver; the effect of which on the rate of exchange must be serious and might be disastrous. It has been found necessary to take net Opium Revenue for the coming year at a lower figure than has appeared in the Estimates during the last 22 years.

"Under the circumstances stated in the preceding paragraph the natural and ordinary course would be for the Government of India to at once take such measures as would suffice to cure the existing deficit and establish equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure. Financial embarrassment gathers weight and force the further it proceeds, and it is the obvious duty of every Government to allow no avoidable delay to occur in dealing with a declared deficit. Postponement of action cannot be justified except on grounds of irresistible weight.

"It will be found on examination of the existing position that there are insuperable objections to any attempt to deal with the anticipated deficit of 1893-94 at the present moment. The immediate cause of our financial difficulties, and the cause which, by comparison and for the time being, dwarfs all others, is the fall in the gold value of silver, which, as I have already shown, has added to the Indian Expenditure in two years more than four crores of rupees. If that fall could be stayed and the rate of exchange with England fixed permanently at even its present low figure, the difficulty of dealing with the present deficit would be comparatively light. The Revenue continues to grow in a satisfactory manner; even under the influence of indifferent seasons and poor harvests it has made fair progress. If we could feel assured that there would be no further fall in exchange, I have little doubt that increase of Revenue, restriction and reduction of Expenditure, with possibly some taxation of a temporary nature, would, in a very short time, re-establish equilibrium. A serious effort would no doubt be required in the first instance, but with a fixed rate of exchange we would have a definite task before us and our measures could be regulated accordingly. But it unfortunately happens that, unless some settlement of the currency question is obtained, there is no prospect of even the most moderate degree of stability in the rate of exchange. The disastrous and unprecedented fall in the gold value of silver which has been experienced during the last few years has destroyed confidence, and we know that the question of stopping their purchases of silver is being seriously agitated in the United States of America. The exact consequences of such stoppage it is impossible to foretell, but the conclusion I have come to is that the consequences would, at any rate for a time, be disastrous to the Indian Exchequer, and that the Government of India would in such case be involved in pecuniary difficulties of greater magnitude, and more lasting in their effects, than any which have hitherto been experienced in this country.

"The imports of silver into India during the current year and the two preceding years have been of great magnitude. In the year 1890-91 the net imports of silver were Rx. 14,175,136, in 1891-92 they were Rx. 9,022,184, and in 1892-93 they promise to amount to Rx. 13,000,000. If the United States ceased to purchase silver, the best calculation I have been able to make shows that India would have to absorb about Rx. 8,000,000 worth of silver yearly in addition to what she imports already, and it is impossible to contemplate such a contingency without grave apprehension.

"The consequences of a forced and sudden addition to the yearly imports of silver into India of Rx. 8,000,000 in a single year would, in the first instance at any rate, be overwhelming, and I should expect that the Eastern Exchanges would be for the time completely disorganised. The fall in the gold value of silver would be so great that the production of silver might be curtailed, but we cannot be certain that this result would follow, or to what extent it would follow, and, as mines that are in full working could not, and would not, be stopped immediately, the process of reduction would take time. If such reduction of output did take place, it would be due to the fall in the price of silver, and would not last longer than the fall in price lasted: every rise in price would be followed by increased activity at the mines and would tend to restore production to its old figure. In short, the stoppage of the purchases of silver by the United States must result in a great fall in the price of that metal, and, though a portion of the first fall might be recovered, it cannot reasonably be expected that, under such circumstances, even the present price of silver would be restored; confidence in the future would be still further weakened, and fluctuations in exchange, of excessive amount and most injurious in their consequences, would be inevitable.

"I have now shown what we must expect if there is no settlement of the currency question, and if the United States stop their purchases of silver. The prospect of a settlement of the currency question lies on the other side of the shield. A settlement of this question would prevent any further fall in exchange, and would be likely to bring about, at the very least, some slight rise.

"It is no violent hypothesis to assume that a settlement of the currency question might raise the rate of exchange by one penny, and so great is the influence of exchange on our finances that a rise of even this small amount would give us equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure in the coming year, and cause our present financial difficulties to disappear.

"In other words, our financial position for the coming year is at the mercy of Exchange and of those who have it in their power to affect in any way the price of silver. If we budget for the present deficit of Rx. 1,595,100 and exchange rises one penny, we shall have a surplus; if it falls a penny, we shall have a deficit of more than three crores; if we impose taxation to the extent of one and a half crores of rupees, a turn of the wheel may require us to impose further taxation of not less magnitude; another turn, and we may find that no taxation at all was required. It will be obvious from what I have just said that what we have got to consider in making our arrangements for next year is not so much the question of increasing the public Revenue, or restricting that portion of the public Expenditure which is under our control, but the chances of a settlement of the currency question.

"I regret that I am unable to give any more definite information regarding the prospects of a settlement of this question than the public at present possess. We know that the question excites the greatest interest in the United States; and we know that, even if the people of that country were willing to let it sleep, the inexorable logic of events will force them before long to take a fresh departure either in one direction or in the other.

"The International Monetary Conference which recently assembled at Brussels separated without arriving at any definite conclusions, but it is proposed that it should re-assemble in May. We do not know whether that proposal will be carried out or not, but in the meantime the currency question as it affects India is being considered by a Committee of experts in London under the presidency of the Lord High Chancellor of England.

"The proceedings of that Committee are secret, and the Government of India have no information as to what the nature of its Report will be, or as to whether the Committee will agree upon a unanimous Report or not. But we know, as do the public, that the Report of the Committee will be made very shortly, and the Government of India have been informed by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India that the decision on the Indian currency question cannot be delayed much longer. Under these circumstances the Government of India have decided—and the soundness of the decision does not appear to me to admit of dispute—that the proper course is to await the decision of the Home authorities on this question before adopting measures, which must necessarily be of a stringent and exceptional nature, with the object of re-establishing equilibrium between Revenue and Expenditure. The immediate restoration of equilibrium would require the imposition of heavy taxation or a large reduction of Expenditure; and yet neither this taxation nor reduction of Expenditure, or even a combination of both means, would be final, or anything better than a temporary makeshift, if the currency question is not settled; measures that might suffice to meet the existing deficit would, in my opinion, be wholly inadequate if the United States ceased to purchase silver. I submit that the Government of India cannot be expected to initiate a policy at the present moment which must have very serious effects on the industry of the country, and disturb and unsettle the Administration, when the lapse of only a month or two might, and in all probability will, show either that their policy was mistaken and their measures uncalled for, or that that policy is wholly insufficient to meet the requirements of the case, and that their treatment of the disease had irritated the patient without materially advancing his progress towards health.

"Disappointing as this decision may appear to some persons, and strongly as I am opposed to delay in dealing with financial embarrassment, I entertain no doubt that the course which the Government of India (with the sanction of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for India) have decided to adopt in the present conjuncture is the wisest under the circumstances; and I trust that the Indian public will acknowledge the difficulties of the present position, and will not press for a hasty decision, or the inconsiderate adoption of measures which must, from the very nature of the case, prove to be either inadequate or unnecessary.

"The Government of India having decided to budget for a deficit of Rx. 1,595,100, and the various Local Governments having decided to draw upon their Provincial and Local balances and to budget for expenditure in excess of their Revenue for the year by Rx. 751,200, the question of Ways and Means for the coming year becomes one of unusual importance.

"We have to find money to cover the deficit of Rx. 1,595,100 in the Imperial Account, and of Rx. 751,200 in the Provincial and Local Account; we have also to find Rx. 3,550,000 for Expenditure on Railways and Canals, which is not charged against Revenue; and we have to provide funds for loans to Local Bodies, agriculturists, and others, to an extent (excluding the repayment of the balance of a loan by the Bombay Port Trust) which involves a net outgoing of Rx. 327,900.

"We have also to meet the payments by the Secretary of State not taken into calculation in any of the above amounts to the extent of £1,889,100, amounting, at the exchange of 1*s*. 2¾*d*., to Rx. 3,070,400, of which about one-half only will be recovered in India from the remitters.

"The task appears, at first sight, a formidable one, but I am glad to be able to say that a loan of 300 lakhs of rupees, to be raised in India, will, so far as can be judged at present, be sufficient to meet all our wants. The amount of this loan is less by 55 lakhs of rupees than the amount which we propose to spend on Railways and Canals and to charge otherwise than against Revenue, and is probably not in excess of the amount which might be raised yearly in the Indian market without producing any serious disturbance.

"As the Government of India have not borrowed for some years, and Government Securities now stand high in price, it may be anticipated that the loan will be raised on favourable terms.

"This satisfactory result as regards the amount to be borrowed is partly due to the high cash balance of Rx. 15,204,200 with which we expect to open the coming year. It is anticipated that the cash balance will be reduced during 1893-94 by Rx. 2,561,100. It is also due in part to the large net deposits in Government Saving Banks which we are now receiving. The figures of net receipts for the past two years, and the estimated receipts for the present and coming years, are as follows:—

	Rx.
1890-91	530,400
1891-92	824,100
1893-94	811,000

"The Bombay Port Trust has taken advantage of the favourable condition of the money market and proposes to repay on 1st April next a loan of Rx. 616,100. The Rampore State will also pay the balance (Rx. 220,000) of the amount it is providing for the construction of the Moradabad-Rampore Railway. The Ways and Means of the year are proportionately strengthened.

"It is expected that the drawings of the Secretary of State will amount to £17,200,000 in the current year and to £18,700,000 in the coming year, making £35,900,000 in the two years. The large amount of these drawings may give rise to the erroneous belief that there has been a great and permanent increase in the Home charges. This is not the case. The Home Expenditure of the last four years has been as follows:

1891-92	15,974,699
1892-93 (Revised Estimate)	16,563,600
1893-94 (Budget Estimate)	15,843,800

"The increased drawings are largely due to payments for Railway stores, and to repayments of money received in former years from Railway Companies, and such repayments, though inconvenient at the present time and involving a considerable temporary addition to the Home charges, will have a beneficial effect on the balance of India's indebtedness in the future.

"I have already explained that our position in the coming year depends almost entirely on the course of exchange, and, though I must recur to the subject again, I have no intention of adding to the mass of literature that has grown up in connection with the currency question.

"The arguments for, and against, an International settlement of that question, and the arguments for, and against, independent action on the part of India, appear to me to have been exhausted. Every scheme that it has been possible for human ingenuity to devise has been elaborated with the utmost care, and pressed on the attention of a perplexed and suffering public as being, in the opinion of its authors, a safe and infallible remedy for undoubted evils. I must plead guilty in my own case to having added something to the burdens of the patient public, but I hope I have not, as sometimes happens in the heat of argument on the currency question, ever used language which conveyed the impression that I looked upon the man with whom I had the misfortune to differ in opinion as being necessarily a person of doubtful honesty and deficient in ordinary intelligence. If I have done so, I retract and apologise. The matter is too serious to permit of any weight being attached to merely personal considerations, and I think I may now fairly call on the disputants to recognise that the suit has, for the time being, passed beyond the stage of pleading and of argument, and that it only remains to await the decision of the tribunal. If the members of that tribunal decide that a remedy is possible by means of independent action on the part of India and should be tried, let us, whatever our private and personal opinions may be, accept that decision and loyally endeavour to give effect to it. In asking others to accept a decision which they may, possibly, not wholly approve, I am not requiring them to do something which I am not prepared to do myself. The remedy which I have always advocated, which I still prefer, and which I hope may some day be adopted, is the solution of the currency question by International agreement; yet this is the solution which at the present moment is not under consideration.

"If, on the other hand, it be decided that, having regard to the interests of India in their widest sense, no remedy for our undoubted difficulties by means of independent action on the part of this country is practicable, or should be attempted, it will be our plain and obvious duty to address ourselves, as best we may, to the task of establishing, securing and maintaining the integrity of the financial position of India. That task may be a heavy one, but difficulties that are met in the right spirit are already half overcome, and I have confidence in the resources of the country and in the industry of its people.

"In the first Financial Statement which issued under my name just four years ago, after calling attention to the financial dangers that threatened us in connection with the question of Exchange and the fall of the Opium Revenue, I remarked that, 'if we could get rid of the Exchange difficulty, I should be prepared to adopt a hopeful view of the future, and, if there were in addition no risk of a great war, I should look forward to our progress in coming years with as much confidence as it is ever safe to feel in financial matters.'

"In the following year, when dwelling on the improvement that had taken place in the course of twelve months and on the grounds for expecting further improvement in the immediate future, I added the following words:—

'I fully recognize that we have difficulties of no slight magnitude still to meet, that the finances are exposed to many dangers, and that unforeseen disasters might for a time upset our calculations. There is every need for caution and for economy, and I should greatly regret if anything I now say, or have said in the past, conveyed the impression that the Government of India are in a position to embark on a policy of adventure of any description.'

"When I made these remarks the tide of Indian financial prosperity was rising, and it was held in some quarters that the policy I advocated was unnecessarily timid. The remission of taxation, it was said, would relieve the springs of industry, and public works should be vigorously prosecuted with funds raised by gold loans in London.

"One of those disasters, the occurrence of which a study of the history of the Indian finances, and more than twenty years' practical experience of their working, had taught me to regard as possible at any moment, and on the shortest warning, has now come upon us, and I do not think the critics will look back with much satisfaction to the opinions they formerly expressed; for my part I have no wish to dwell on the subject, and I recall the matter at the present time merely with the object of adding force to what I have now to say.

"Even under present circumstances, when the horizon is dark with the approach of what may prove to be the greatest financial convulsion of the present century, I do not draw back from the opinion I formerly expressed that the revenues of India are adequate to meet her wants; but I wish to say in the most emphatic terms that, if the Ship of State is to pass successfully through the storm which she is now entering, our measures must be taken in due time, must be regulated by prudence and forethought, and must be carried into execution with strict regard to economy."

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN presented the Further and Final Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Land Acquisition Act, 1890. He said that the proposals made to the Council in February last had been circulated to all Local Governments in India, and that their replies had been received and considered. The proposals then made had met with general acceptance. There was one important amendment, however, received from Bombay which the Select Committee had not seen their way to accede to of which detailed notice was made in the Report, but there had been several useful and valuable suggestions made by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and the High Court of Bengal and by the Government of Bombay itself which the Committee had been glad to incorporate in the Bill. In the Committee's recommendations they had explained that they proposed in the interests of convenience that the Act of 1870 should be formally re-enacted with the amendments which they had now the honour to propose.

INLAND EMIGRATION ACT, 1882, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS moved that the Report of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Inland Emigration Act, 1882, be taken into consideration. He said:—"I am surprised to find that the Government of India has been accused of undue haste in the prosecution even of this measure. So far as my personal inclinations go, I should only be too pleased to seize any reasonable excuse for letting so difficult and intricate a subject stand over as a legacy to my successor; but it does not seem right that an Administration which has, at least to some extent, mastered its main difficulties should shirk its final determination. It is now three years since the whole subject of Assam labour and emigration was discussed in one of the most exhaustive, and perhaps also one of the most voluminous reports I have ever seen—a report comprising 204 lengthy paragraphs and extending over 350 pages of printed foolscap. And nearly a year has elapsed since our conclusions upon this report and all our correspondence on the question with the Secretary of State and with the Local Governments concerned were given to the public. The Bill in which these conclusions were formulated is therefore nothing new: it merely gives expression to a policy which we proclaimed to the world a year ago. And even then that policy could not claim novelty as one of its recommendations. If there was one thing more than another which struck me when I first took up the subject, it was the number of divergent Acts which had followed one another in quick succession—there were at least five in less than twenty years; and the keystone of the advice which I eventually submitted to my colleagues was that we should have no more empirical legislation, but should content ourselves with improving and shaping towards our final object those methods which employers and labourers and others interested had themselves chosen and developed as most suitable to existing conditions. In a word, our declared policy is to bring the law into harmony with actual facts, and to prepare the way for really free emigration and absolute liberty of contract. That being so, most of the provisions of this Bill required very little consideration indeed. The Committee which has reported upon them was thoroughly representative, and I have no doubt that, so far as its members are agreed, the Council will not hesitate to adopt their conclusions without my troubling them with further explanations. There are but three points upon which there is any difference of opinion, and these will now be brought to issues which this Council is quite competent to decide. Only one of the three—the duration of the penal contract—really arises out of the Bill as formulated.

"We have, however, received quite recently one extremely hostile criticism to which it is necessary that I should make at least a brief reply. It emanates from the Indian Association and must be in the hands of each Hon'ble Member. It is an attack not so much on the Bill now on the table as on the Act of 1882—not so much on what we propose to do as on what we have left untouched; and this is but natural, for it professes to be written in the interests of the coolies, and everything that we propose to do is calculated to advance their interests and perfect their protection.

"Excluding for the present the questions of malpractices in recruitment and compulsory initial registration, the Association's objections may be summed up under five heads:—

(1) it is said that the special legislation of the Act is for the benefit of a particular class—the employer;
(2) it is urged that such special legislation is no longer necessary;
(3) it is alleged that the recorded opinions of officers show that it operates injuriously to the labourer;
(4) it is stated that Act XIII of 1859 has been condemned by high officials and should be declared inapplicable to tea-garden contracts;
(5) it is affirmed that the conditions of child-life on a tea-garden are unfavourable, and that the mortality among children and infants is unduly high.

"A general observation which I have to make with regard to all these objections is that they are only supported by fragmentary extracts from reports, and that all these extracts relate to a period before 1887; the Indian Association have altogether overlooked the very elaborate enquiries into the condition of the tea-garden coolie made in the years 1889-92 by or under the direction of Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick, Mr. Quinton and Mr. Ward, and it is upon the results of these enquiries that our conclusions are mainly based.

"I will now take up in order each of the objections which I have just specified.

"The first objection, which suggests that Act I of 1882 is maintained merely in the interests of the tea-industry, proceeds on an entire misapprehension of the case. The objects of the special legislation were fully explained in an extract which I will now read from our published Despatch of 5th October, 1891, to the Secretary of State:—

'It is desirable at the outset to guard against the supposition that special legislation is maintained merely in the interests of the tea-industry. The Provinces from which the labour-force for tea-gardens is mainly drawn, known as the recruiting Provinces under the present law, are Bengal and the North-Western Provinces; and the principal recruiting areas are either densely-inhabited districts, such as many in Behar and the North-Western Provinces, where the means of subsistence are insufficient for the support of the entire population in tolerable comfort, or such tracts as Chota Nagpore, where, though population relatively to area does not appear excessive, wages are extremely low and the labouring classes are unable, without some relief by emigration, to obtain a decent livelihood. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in his special report informs us that R20 represent seven months' wages for an able-bodied man in Chota Nagpore, and that from a period antecedent to the commencement of labour legislation the labouring classes of this locality have looked to emigration to Assam as a means of improving their condition. We invite attention in this connection to the enquiry into the economic condition of the lower classes of the agricultural population made by this Government in 1887-88, the results of which were reported with our Despatch No. 3 (Famine), dated 30th October, 1888. Your Lordship will there find an account of the tendency towards poverty and pressure among the landless and labouring classes in certain areas which it has been our steadfast endeavour to counteract by emigration. During the recent scarcity in Orissa and in the adjacent districts of Madras there was a sudden development of emigration to Assam from Ganjam and Vizagapatam, and the Madras Government asked us to legislate with a view to extending the recruitment provisions of Act I of 1882 to that Presidency; and a similar application, assented to by the Local Administration, has recently been made on behalf of the tea-industry for the extension of the Act to the Central Provinces, which are already used as a recruiting field. It has been the settled policy of this Government to promote emigration from areas which are over-populated and liable to famine to others enjoying more favourable conditions; and the importation of immigrants to Assam at the expense of persons interested in the tea-industry has done much towards opening out and colonizing the fertile but sparsely-peopled districts of the North-Eastern Frontier.'

"The Assam system is based on precisely the same policy as our system of Colonial emigration. For whose interests does the Association suppose that we have sanctioned and still continue emigration to Dutch Guiana? or that we allowed, and would have continued if the Indian labourers had been well treated, emigration to the French Colonies of Réunion, Martinique and Guadeloupe?

"The second objection assumes that the need for special legislation has ceased. As to this I need only remind the Council that the question whether it is necessary to continue special legislation for the control of labour emigration to Assam was the chief point which formed the subject of enquiry in 1885, and again recently. The opinion that special legislation was essential in the interests of the labourer as well as of the employer, and also in the interests of good administration, was emphatically expressed by my hon'ble friend Sir Charles Elliott in 1885, and accepted by the Government of India and the Secretary of State. The same opinion was expressed by Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick in 1889 and by Mr. Quinton in 1890; and the Government of India have again been constrained to accept it, after very careful consideration, subject to this reservation—that everything which is practicable, consistently with the present conditions of emigration and of the tea-industry, shall be done to prepare the way for the gradual abandonment of the labour system sanctioned by the Act. We might indeed have had some doubt on the point if the Surma Valley alone had been concerned, although there are parts of Cachar almost as difficult of access as many of the Colonies; but there was quite a consensus of opinion that the districts along the Upper Brahmaputra still require the special law.

"It has indeed been urged that, if the more accessible districts do not require a penal contract, it should not be allowed for the benefit only of more remote gardens; that these ought to attract labour by paying higher wages. But this argument loses sight of the fact that the special law is necessary to protect the nearer garden against the enticement of the coolies which it has exerted itself to import, quite as much as to facilitate such importation in the first instance.

"On the point that the Act system operates to the injury of the labourer the only opinions quoted are those of Messrs. Porteous and Stevenson and of Mr. Ward, the present Chief Commissioner of Assam. Dealing, first, with the opinion of the two first, I need hardly say that it is only natural that different officers should hold different opinions about the working of such an elaborate system as that of this Act. A prudent person will weigh one opinion against another, and look to the character and experience of those who express them: if we are only to take action when there is perfect unanimity, the world would stand still. Here, however, we are asked to undo what has been already done, because many years ago two or three gentlemen did not approve of it. On the other side we have the repeated assurance of successive Chief Commissioners—Sir Steuart Bayley, Sir Charles Elliott, Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick, Mr. Quinton and even Mr. Ward himself—that the tea-labourer in Assam enjoys far more favourable conditions than those which fall to the lot of his fellows in his native district. I would further observe that Mr. Stevenson's remarks related to the district of Sylhet—a district in which the Act was less used in proportion to its labour-force than in any other; and that Mr. Porteous was writing with reference to the Karimganj Subdivision, the most advanced part of his (in this respect) advanced district. No observations as to Sylhet can be taken as applicable to the labour-districts generally. As for Mr. Ward's remarks, these have been quoted apart from their context and will not bear the construction put upon them. His opinion as to the expediency of retaining the Act has been recently emphasized by his strong opposition to any reduction in the term of engagement permissible.

"The next point is the question as to the retention of Act XIII of 1859 in its application to garden-contracts. It is perhaps somewhat inconsistent of the Association, while objecting altogether to special legislation as such, to ask that this Act should be declared inapplicable to Assam when it is in force in most other parts of the country. It is, however, in one sense a special Act, and doubts have at times been expressed whether it is really applicable to garden-contracts. Sir Charles Elliott proposed in 1882-83 that it should be declared inapplicable—by legislation, I presume; and the Government of India in 1885 were inclined, on theoretical grounds, to concur in this view. They accordingly directed an inquiry in Assam with a view to taking action in this direction; and it is remarkable that three successive Chief Commissioners, who enquired into practical working of the Act with a view to its repeal; Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick, Mr. Quinton and Mr. Ward—have declared themselves distinctly in favour of allowing it to be applied to tea-garden contracts as a part of the ordinary law. The Government of India have accepted this view, as they are satisfied that this Act is more lenient and popular from the labourers' point of view than Act I of 1882, and also because it seems to be serving a useful purpose as a stepping-stone from Act contracts to free labour. I will read a very short extract from the Government of India's Despatch of October, 1891, showing that the objections to this Act are merely theoretical:—

'Side by side with Act I contracts another system of contracts, not recognised by the special law, has come largely into use, based upon Act XIII of 1859. We have pointed out that, however objectionable in theory and opposed to the spirit of modern legislation in England, in its practical operation this Act has been harmless and even beneficial; that it is used chiefly on healthy gardens and for labourers who can be relied upon not to desert; that among the coolies contracted under it the death-rate is low, the rate of desertions still lower, wages high, and judicial punishments only about 4 a year to every 10,000 coolies. In the Surma Valley this system is very popular with employers as well as with labourers, and is facilitating the transition from officially controlled to free labour. In view of these facts, and of the great dissatisfaction which its repeal would create among all classes concerned, we do not think that we should be justified, on the information now before us, in withdrawing this Act from tea-gardens.'

"I pass on now to the last point urged by the Association against the labour-system as carried out in the tea-districts. It is suggested that the mortality among children and infants is excessive, and the remarks of one medical officer are quoted, showing the unfavourable conditions under which, in his opinion, children are brought up on tea-gardens. But it so happens that the very remarks which are quoted by the Association as having been made by this officer in 1884—nine years ago, be it remarked—were circulated for the opinion of district officers by Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick in May, 1889, in his exhaustive circular directing an enquiry into the working of Act I of 1882; and the district officers' replies are given at length in Mr. Quinton's Special Report. The conclusion arrived at was that, though there is much that is unfavourable in the conditions of child-life on a tea-garden, as elsewhere among the poorer classes, the remarks of this officer were much exaggerated; and that he had been misled into drawing general conclusions from the peculiarly unsatisfactory state of things on an individual garden, in which the death-rate among children had certainly been high. Moreover, there is nothing whatever to show that even on that garden the high infant mortality had anything to do with the labour-system. Women who depend on daily wages for their subsistence often do neglect their offspring everywhere. They are less likely to do so on a garden where they have permanent employment, and such considerate treatment as I known is generally given by the planters of Assam, even for their own sake, than if they were hired day by day.

"It is difficult to compare the reported death-rate among children on tea-gardens with that prevailing elsewhere, as the statistics are not clearly shown in the Provincial Sanitary Reports, but for the satisfaction of the Council I have had the following figures compiled from such data as we possess. I find from the Assam Annual Immigration Reports that the death-rate per 1,000 among children under 16 on tea-gardens ranges from 25·6 to 36·4. The figures for the last six years have been—in 1886, 36·4; then 31·7, 34·0, 33·5, 25·6, and in 1891 30·7.

"On the other hand, the Provincial Sanitary Reports show that the death-rate per 1,000 of children under 15—unfortunately the age limit differs by one year—among the general population was as follows in each province for the year 1891:—

Madras	30·89
Bombay	36·01
Bengal	30·12
North-Western Provinces and Oudh	40·45
Punjab	34·81
Central Provinces	48·76
Burma	19·28
Assam	32·65
Berar	64·05

"It is certain that the registration of deaths is, at any rate, not less accurate on tea-gardens than among the general population, and the above figures do not point to any excessive mortality among children on tea-gardens. In fact, the garden-rate for 1891, though much higher than that of 1890, was nearly the same as that returned by Bengal and Madras, and lower than the figure of every other Province, except Burma, where little reliance can be placed on the statistics.

"The only other point, affecting the working of the system in the labour-districts, which arises out of the representation of the Association, relates to the verification of labour-contracts entered into direct between the employer and the labourer under section 111 of the Act. As to this I need only refer to the published correspondence as showing that the Government of India have given most anxious consideration to this subject. They have laid down, as a condition to be rigidly insisted upon, that all such contracts must be verified, and one of the most important executive questions which have been discussed with the Chief Commissioner is the necessity of having more frequent and better inspection. I may also remind Hon'ble Members that the Bill now before them limits to one year the term for which contracts may be entered into between employer and labourer without the intervention of a public officer. This is the only class of contracts which require verification.

"With regard to the subject of initial registration, as well as with regard to abuses in recruitment, I propose to reserve my observations. Two Members of the Committee seem to be in favour of making such registration compulsory, or at least optional subject to such conditions as will make it compulsory; and if they press their view I shall have a right to reply. The point was thoroughly threshed out in 1882, and the published papers show very clearly why we could not revert to the old system. I also referred to the matter at some length when I introduced this Bill. At present I need only point out to the two Hon'ble Members concerned that if their view is pressed and should happen to prevail, the practical result must be the withdrawal or re-committal of the present Bill, most of the provisions of which are directed to a system of free or privately-assisted emigration, and to remedy mischiefs arising out of that system or defects which have been discovered in it. The immediate consequence then would be that the labourers will be deprived of that fuller protection which we had hoped to secure to them; but the ultimate consequences would, in my opinion, be far more serious. Emigration would again be brought under the irksome legal trammels from which for the last ten years, it has been emancipated: it would be forced back into those official channels which both labourers and employers regard with so much dislike: and the consummation to which we all look forward—the abandonment of special legislation and the substitution of free for officially controlled labour—will be indefinitely postponed.

"Another amendment of which notice has been given proposes to raise the age at which a labour-contract is permissible from 16 to 18. This is a new point which has never before been discussed and was first raised in Committee. I did not think I could accept the proposal to alter the law, which was doubtless fully considered in 1873 and 1882, without giving the Assam employers and authorities an opportunity of considering its practical consequences and submitting their views. I am, however, willing to undertake, on behalf of the Government of India, to refer the question without delay, and either to publish the result or to bring in a Bill to raise the age according as the decision at which we ultimately arrive may be against or in favour of the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao's amendment. Perhaps under these circumstances the Hon'ble Member will withdraw his amendment. But he must not misunderstand me. I am willing, I say, to give this undertaking, not because I am personally satisfied that the change is desirable, and far less because I admit that work on the plantations is specially trying, or that there is any real danger of minors being decoyed away; but because I sympathise with my hon'ble friend's anxiety to protect them against any possibility of such a thing. On the other hand, the Council will doubtless bear in mind that the ordinary age of majority under Hindu law is 16, and that under the Penal Code it is no offence to take away a male of 14 or a female of 16, with his or her consent, from lawful guardianship. A person of either sex, aged 14, is reckoned as an adult under the Factory Act, and a youth of 16 to 18 is generally married. If, therefore, the amendment is pressed, I shall vote against it. I cannot see why a labourer in the labour-districts should be incapacitated—and the amendment would have this effect—from entering into a contract and securing a bonus, simply because he is not yet 18.

"Lastly, there is the question whether the term for which labour-contracts may be permitted should be three, four or five years. It was raised to five years in 1892. We proposed to reduce it again to three as a long step in the direction of abolishing penal contract altogether. In Committee, however, the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay satisfied most of us that this was going somewhat too far. The principle seems to be that the employer should be able to recoup himself from the labour of the man whom he has brought up at his own expense from the congested districts, and the Act itself has provided in the redemption section a rough measure of the value of an immigrant's labour in successive years of his contract. It was for this purpose only that the redemption section was referred to. My hon'ble friend Mr. Chentsal Rao has misunderstood the argument: the number of labourers willing or able to buy themselves off is infinitesimal. But by section 142 the value of the unexpired term of a labour-contract is fixed on the following scale: Rs. 12 for the first year, Rs. 36 for the second, Rs. 60 for each subsequent year. Thus, the value of a three years' contract may be taken to be Rs. 108, and that of an engagement for four years at Rs. 168. Allowance must be made for normal casualties, and for the men who cannot stand the climate and have to be repatriated. It seems fair, therefore, that the contract should have a margin of value over and above the actual cost of importing a well-conditioned labourer. That cost is rarely below Rs. 100 even at Dhubri, and further expenses have to be incurred between Dhubri and the gardens and on the gardens themselves. On the whole, I came to the conclusion that nothing short of a four-year contract would be fair to the employer.

"Perhaps it will be well that I should mention here the Chhattisgarh cases which have been referred to by my hon'ble friend Mr. Chentsal Rao in his minute of dissent. They do not all bear on the age question, but I may dispose of them all together:—

"Case (a) relates to a boy of twelve. It does not appear how the facts stated had been ascertained in the absence both of the boy and the man who took him away. I suspect that they are founded on mere surmise, but, if true, the case is one of kidnapping, punishable under the ordinary law. I observe that no report of the case was made to Assam, and the boy may have gone to one of the Colonies after registration as another emigrant's son.

"Case (b) seems to relate to a registered woman. If she was not registered, any detention of her against her will would amount to wrongful confinement. It does not appear what are the false pretences which were alleged to have been employed, but I rather gather that she proceeded on her journey willingly.

"Case (c), if it shows anything, shows how absolutely free the emigrants are at Dhubri, and how readily they obtain repatriation. It is hinted that the emigration system is responsible for this adult male not having actually returned to his village, but he was apparently anxious to go elsewhere, and he was of course perfectly free to obtain labour at a mill or factory.

"Cases (d) and (e) establish two facts—(1) that it is known to be useless to put forward a girl of 13 or 14 as ready to execute a contract, and (2) that her decoyers can be severely punished under the ordinary law.

"Case (f) relates to a half-witted woman of loose character; she was, however, stopped and sent home.

"Case (g) seems to me to make against the proposal to raise the age to 18, as it shows how easily any age-limit can be evaded where the young people are ready to lend themselves as accomplices Here a boy and girl passed themselves off as the children of a stranger, who in his turn called himself their father. This might just as well have been done at a registration office.

"I cannot think that any of these cases, or all of them taken together, go far to support Mr. Chentsal Rao's contention; nor do they in any way controvert the position which the Government of India have assumed, namely, that such abuses as do exist are best met by vigilance on the part of the executive officers.

"My hon'ble friend is also in error in representing that everyone was agreed as to the term being three years. On the contrary, the officer writing under the greatest sense of responsibility, the Chief Commissioner of the Province, who has also much experience of Assam and the most intimate knowledge of its present needs and conditions, has expressed himself as very strongly opposed to any reduction of the five years' term. Mr. Quinton took the same view, and so do all the Assam officers whom I have been able to consult.

"On the other hand, I am clearly of opinion that four years is a sufficiently long period, and that we should not allow private contracts to exceed one year."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Hon'ble MR. CHENTSAL RAO said:—"I should have gladly acceded to the suggestion of the Hon'ble Mover to withdraw my amendment, pending a reference to the Assam authorities, but for the fact that the question I raise is a very simple one, and it is difficult to see how a reference to the Assam Government can throw any fresh light. The amendment which stands in my name si briefly this.

"The general law in the matter of contracts is that no one under 18 years can enter into a valid contract, and what I propose is that the same law should apply to labour-contracts also. But section 11 of the Emigration Act enacts that, notwithstanding the Contract Act, it shall be lawful for any person of the age of 16 years or upwards to enter into a labour-contract. I have studied the debates that took place when the Act was passed, and I do not find one word of explanation in favour of the reduction of the age. If it is necessary that a man or woman should be at least 18 years old to be able to enter into a contract creating merely civil liability, I do not at all see why a person under that age should be declared competent to enter into a labour-contract involving criminal liability. The only argument advanced in the Select Committee in favour of retaining the provision was that, since men and women of 16 years commence to labour and earn their livelihood, there is no reason why they should be prevented from entering into a valid contract. This argument does not appear to me to be sound. Boys of even 12 years labour and earn their livelihood, but we cannot on that account argue that they should be able to enter into a valid contract. There is ample evidence that many persons who enter into labour-contract are men of a very low order of intelligence. The Deputy Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, which is one of the large recruiting districts, while proposing to raise the age of the male labourers to 18 and that of the female labourers to 20, remarks that 'the Kol girls of 16 are too young and simple to be able to properly understand the nature of the labour-contract' and that 'it is even doubtful if youths of that age have sufficient intelligence in this respect.' Convinced, as I am, of the reasonableness of the amendment I am proposing, I should have hesitated to bring it forward if I had not the support of my colleague, the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens, who has full knowledge of the working of the Act and of the general intelligence of the class of labourers in this part of the country; and I fully trust that the matter will receive at the hands of the Council that consideration which its importance deserves.

"Without taking up, my Lord, more of your valuable time on a simple question like this, I beg to move the following amendments, and I beg that the sense of the Council may be ascertained:—

"That after the word 'repealed' in sub-section (2) of section 3 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, the following be inserted, namely:—

'for the word "sixteen" the word "eighteen" shall be substituted.'"

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN said that he had not intended to intervene in this discussion in any way, but he wished to explain that if Mr. Chentsal Rao pressed his amendment he would be unable to support it. As he understood the matter, a coolie when he was imported into Assam was, for all intents and purposes, a complete stranger to the place and the work. He entered upon work to him altogether novel, and he had to receive considerable instruction before he could be called in any sense an efficient labourer in a tea-garden. That being so, he thought that the ordinary law of apprenticeship should be applied in the case of the coolie labourer. He believed that in almost all departments of life the system of enlisting a recruit at an early age was in vogue. Amongst ourselves the system of enlisting apprentices at an early age was very largely practised. The soldier, for instance, was enlisted under age for foreign service; young men were brought out to merchants' offices in Calcutta under age on an agreement to serve for a certain time; and, if he might draw an illustration from his own case, he was himself recruited by the Secretary of State for service in a distant and malarious country at the age of 18, when according to credible information under English law he was incapable of entering into a civil contract, and he was given no option whatever as to withdrawing from his engagement. He thought, therefore, that there was no particular harm in allowing a labourer in this country to contract himself to an apprenticeship at the age of 16. The Hon'ble Mover might say that in his (MR WOODBURN'S) own particular case he had the advantage over the ordinary coolie of this country in possessing a better education and more general information; but he could say that in the case of the coolie the information was also very complete and the conditions and terms of service very accurately known. In the part of the country with which he was familiar coolies returned to their homes and brought information as to the condition of service, which he was bound to say was extremely creditable to the general body of capitalists in Assam. It was in this way that the knowledge was spread through the whole country, that any man, with health and energy, who chose to go to Assam, was certain to find remunerative employment there.

The Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM said:—"I think it would be objectionable for the following reasons to raise the age of competency of entering into a labour-contract from 16 to 18 years. The change will cause inconvenience owing to the large number of grown up persons capable of work who will be sent up as dependents and not as workers, and also to the fact that many young men and women who are capable of doing the work will not be able after reaching the age of 16 on the garden to enter into a local contract under sections 111 and 112, and get the bonus which is usually given for such contracts. Moreover, while employed as children without a contract, they would receive wages at a lower rate. I further wish to observe that the work required on tea-gardens is by no means severe, as assumed in the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao's minute, and that young people of 16 are fully capable of completing their daily task in five or six hours."

The Hon'ble MR. STEVENS said:—"I propose to vote in favour of the amendment of the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao. It appears to me that the analogy of apprenticeship does not altogether hold good. Here we have the case of a young person who is recruited for a very distant, and I may say, in most cases, an almost unknown, land. He goes to new work, and at any rate he is likely to be amongst strangers. I see comparatively little objection to a local contract being entered into by such person, but, in regard to any penal contract, I think it an extremely serious thing for a young person to enter into an engagement which binds him under the severe penalties imposed upon him by our law. Many of the alleged abuses which have occurred have taken the form of recruitment of young children—I mean young children of 12, 13 or 14 years of age, and I do not think such cases are disposed of by saying that they are met by the ordinary law. I think that the amendment of Mr. Chentsal Rao would have the effect of preventing any attempt to commit such cases, because it would be known that it would be useless, since, though such a child could sometimes be taken to be 16, he could never be supposed to be 18; and again it seems to me that it would be in accordance with the acknowledged policy of the Government to assimilate the actual contract law as far as possible with the ordinary contract law of the country."

The Hon'ble FAZULBHAI VISHRAM said that as far as he could judge it seemed to him that more harm would be done to the coolie than otherwise if the age was increased; because, as the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao had admitted, a coolie at the age of 16 was capable of work, and as a matter of fact did work, and if we precluded him from entering into a labour-contract we should deprive him of the higher rate of wages, as he would then be paid at the minor scale, as Mr. Buckingham had just pointed out, and, that being the case, he thought that it would be better to leave the age as it at present stood, namely, 16.

The Hon'ble DR. RASHBEHARY GHOSE said:—"I am prepared to vote in favour of the amendment proposed by the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao, and I may add generally for the reasons given by him and the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens. With regard to a remark which fell from the Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins, I do not find that there was any discussion in 1882 with reference to the age at which a coolie lad ought to be allowed to enter into a binding labour-contract. My idea is that the limit of 16 years was taken from the Bengal Act of 1873, in which I find the limit of age with regard to the capacity to enter into a labour-contract was laid down for the first time at 16 years. I have been looking into the debates on the measure in the Bengal Council before it was passed into law, but I cannot find in the discussions on the measure any reference whatever to this age question, and I imagine for the very simple reason that it was not intended by the Bengal Council in prescribing the age of 16 years to alter in any way whatever the law as it then stood with regard to the age of majority. In 1873 it was generally understood that the age of majority was 16 years, and I take this to be the reason why the matter was not noticed in the discussions in Council. The effect of the Act of 1882 is this. It lowers the age with regard to the capacity to enter into a contract of a very peculiar character, and it sets aside the ordinary law which regulates contracts by minors in order that a young coolie lad may be enabled to earn his wages by entering into a penal contract to perform services in what to him is an absolutely foreign country, amid strange surroundings and in a climate which is certainly not over-healthy. I submit that, although I can understand why, as Mr. Grimley, an officer of great experience, has pointed out, the age of majority should rather be raised in these cases, I do not see any sufficient reason why it should be lowered."

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR said:—"Personally I am inclined to support the principle involved in this amendment, not only on account of the advantage of bringing the law into harmony with the ordinary contract law, but on account of the argument urged by my hon'ble friend Mr. Stevens, which is a very sound one, that the increase of the age will enable officers to draw a more distinct line between those persons who can be properly recruited and those who are enticed and persuaded to contract when they are too young for the labour of the gardens; and further because this is a step, though a very gentle step, in the direction, in which we must all wish to move, of gradually withdrawing from the penal contract attaching to labour in Assam. But I am fully persuaded that it is impossible for the Council to pass such an amendment, and by so doing upset what has been the established law since 1873, without consulting the authorities in Assam. It is far too late to bring forward a radical change of this kind in a matter as to which we have no information that the existing law is working in any unsatisfactory way, and therefore I think that the Hon'ble Mover should accept the undertaking made by the Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins, who has promised that the question shall be submitted to the Assam authorities, that it shall be thoroughly discussed and, if they are agreed that the change should take place, he will provide that at next year's session of this Council a Bill should be introduced to carry out this change. I should myself be glad to see it carried out, but only after the fullest discussion, and provided no material objection is raised by the persons most experienced in the working of the Act and most interested in its operation."

The Hon'ble SIR ALEXANDER MILLER said that when this question first came up for consideration his own feeling was entirely in consonance with what the Lieutenant-Governor had said, but he felt then, and he felt still, that to entertain this question, no notice having been given of it in the earlier stages of the proceedings, would be to throw over this Bill for another year, and he thought that, looking at the fact that every provision of the Bill was in favour of the labourer, rendered his position better, and gave him extra security against oppression, it would be a very unwise act, and one that the labourers would have the greatest reason to complain of, if they were kept under the Act of 1882 for another year, when they might get the great benefit of this Bill. For that reason, and for that only, he would vote against the amendment.

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—"It is now for the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao to say whether he will press his amendment to a division. I have listened attentively to his remarks, and wish to say that, if I am unable to support him, it is not because I am desirous of being understood as saying that I regard his proposal as an unreasonable or impracticable one. His suggestion that the age should be governed by the ordinary law has on the face of it a good deal to recommend it. On the other hand, the point is entirely a new one, and I think that what has been said at this table makes it clear that, if the proposal were adopted, it would undoubtedly operate as a considerable restriction upon the importation of coolie labour—a kind of restriction which we could not impose unless a very clear case was shown for it.

"The whole of the conditions of coolie labour in Assam are so exceptional and so difficult for any one who is used, for instance, to the conditions of the European labour market, to understand, that I should always hesitate, without the fullest information, to make myself a party to any new point of departure in dealing with cases of this description.

"I shall therefore vote against the amendment, but I shall do so on the understanding that the matter is to be further examined, and, should our inquiries go to show that there are sufficient grounds for adding the restriction proposed by Mr. Chentsal Rao, the question of that restriction shall be taken up and duly considered at the proper time."

The Hon'ble CHENTSAL RAO said that under the circumstances he would withdraw his amendment, as also the subsequent amendment which stood in his name, that in the first paragraph of section 7 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee, for the word "After" the word "For" and for the word "inserted" the word "substituted" be substituted, and that the numbering of the new sections proposed by the same section for insertion in the Act be altered to 11, 11A, 11B and 11C, respectively.

The amendments were therefore withdrawn.

The Hon'ble DR. RASHBEHARY GHOSE moved that after section 4 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee the following section be inserted, the numbering of sections from the present section 5 to the end being altered correspondingly:—

"5. After section 7 of the said Act, the following section shall be inserted, namely:—

'7A. (1) Any person assisting a native of India to emigrate to a labour-district for the purpose of entering into a labour-contract under this Act therein may take such intending emigrant before a Registering-officer having jurisdiction within the local area in which such intending emigrant resides.

"(2) If it appears to the Registering-officer that such intending emigrant resident within his jurisdiction is willing to emigrate, and has not been induced to undertake to emigrate by any coercion, undue influence, fraud, misrepresentation or mistake, the Registering-officer shall register, in a book to be kept for the purpose, such particulars regarding him and the persons, if any, whom he wishes to have registered as his dependents, as the Local Government may by rule prescribe.

'(3) Every officer registering any person shall, if so requested, forthwith forward a certified copy of such particulars to the Inspector or Magistrate resident at the civil station of Dhubri in the Goalpara District.'

He said:—"In moving the amendments which stand in my name I do not think that it is at all necessary to trace the history of legislation connected with inland emigration prior to the year 1882. I will only observe that the present Emigration Act, which was passed in that year, made a very important innovation, which was described not altogether felicitously, as I shall have occasion to point out later on, as free emigration outside the scope of the Act. It was said that the numerous restrictions imposed under the old law hampered emigration and artificially raised the price of labour in Assam. The new departure then taken by the Legislature would, it was thought, promote the interest of a valuable industry and at the same time lead to the gradual extinction of the contractors, system to be replaced by free emigration. These somewhat sanguine expectations, I think it will not be denied, have not been fulfilled. The contractors' system is not extinct, the price of labour has not been reduced, and free emigration to Upper Assam, in the opinion of many, it would be no exaggeration to say, still remains an unfulfilled prediction. Some of the worst fears, however, of those who were then ridiculed as pessimists have been realised. The reversal of the previous policy of State-controlled emigration gave rise almost immediately to evils of serious magnitude, and the Government were obliged to interfere in 1889 for the sanitary protection of the so-called free emigrant to Assam. Act I of that year of the Bengal Council empowered the Local Government to frame rules for the health and comfort of the emigrant in transit, and one class of evils which made themselves painfully felt have been removed, by means of regulations made under the Statute. The present Bill is intended to guard against another class of evils the wide prevalence of which cannot be disputed for a moment—I mean the malpractices of recruiters working under the so-called free system, and some of the sections contain provisions directed against such abuses. But I venture to think with the greatest deference that the evils which have grown up would not be adequately met by the Bill as it stands, and it is therefore that I beg to propose for the acceptance of Hon'ble Members the amendments which stand on the paper, and which, I may mention, have been framed on the lines of a proposal which was made by the Government of Bengal, then presided over by Sir Steuart Bayley, and which received the entire approval of Mr. Westland and the qualified assent of the late Mr. Quinton, both Chief Commissioners of Assam. This proposal was negatived by the Government of India, but on grounds which, I humbly submit, do not appear to be quite conclusive. According to the Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill, the objections to a system of local registration are that it would be expensive, vexatious and altogether alien to the principle of free emigration which for the last twenty years the Government have sought to encourage. There would also be serious difficulties in discriminating between emigrants who had been some time in Assam and those who had not; and, lastly, it is said that initial registration would be an ineffective remedy against those abuses which really prevail, and which alone called for special measures of repression—against those cases in which the labourer, though under the influence of enticement or misrepresentation, is nevertheless a willing emigrant and himself desirous of emigrating.

"Before discussing the validity of these objections I would beg to call the attention of Hon'ble Members to the serious and widespread character of the existing abuses which were not foreseen by the framers of the Act. The letter of the Bengal Government, No 142, dated the 28th August, 1890, forcibly points out the very large proportion of cases of fraudulent enticement, often amounting to the virtual kidnapping of children and youths of both sexes, and this assertion is based, not on the irresponsible utterances of anonymous journalists or of travelling friends of humanity, but on the statements of the representatives of Government in the recruiting districts. The late Chief Commissioner of Assam also admitted that the Dhubri system was open to objection, and insisted upon the necessity for greater stringency in local registration. I may here observe that the practical operation of the so-called free system which resulted in the Dhubri contracts was never anticipated by the supporters of the Act, and it was, I believe, far from the intention of the Legislature as well as of the Government that the concessions then made should be taken advantage of for such a purpose.

"To come now to the objections to initial or local registration. It is said, in the first place, that such a system would be expensive; but, as pointed out by the Bengal Government in their letter, paragraph 26, the expense of the proceeding cannot exceed eight annas a coolie, or at the outside one rupee eight annas, if a registration fee of one rupee is charged on initial verifications. The additional cost of initial registration is due to a distinction, for which the Bengal Government were unable to find any justification, between contracts executed in the emigration districts and those made at Dhubri. And here I might be permitted to ask, with regard to the statement that official restrictions would check emigration and render it unpopular, whether an army of five thousand unlicensed recruiters, many of whom are released convicts or men of very doubtful character, in the Ranchi District alone was likely, with their numerous malpractices, to make emigration popular in the recruiting fields. It seems to me that experience has proved that some wholesome restrictions on unlicensed recruiting are essential, not merely in the interests of the recruiter but also in the interests of the planter in Assam, and I am glad to find that the Hon'ble Mr. Buckingham quotes with approval some remarks of Mr. Driver, described as a gentleman of considerable experience in the recruiting districts in which the official registration of labourers is insisted upon. All the Bengal officials, I may say without a single exception, as far as I know, are of the same opinion. With regard to the vexations connected with official interference in any form, I would ask Hon'ble Members in the words of Mr. Grimley whether, in the face of the numerous restrictions imposed under the Bengal Act, to refuse the safeguard of official registration is not a mere straining at gnats.

"But it is said that initial registration would prove an ineffective remedy against the abuses which really prevail, and that vigorous action on the part of the executive acting under the ordinary law supplemented by the provisions of the present Bill would reduce the malpractices of the unlicensed recruiter within the narrowest limits. But, as observed by the Pioneer newspaper, the acts of the recruiter in many cases, and those some of the worst cases, are such that they cannot be reached by the law nor by executive action, which I presume must be controlled by law. I cannot here resist the temptation of quoting the whole passage, as the picture is by no means overcharged and as it expresses the general feeling of the country with regard to the unlicensed system.

'Boys and girls are cajoled or intimidated into leaving their homes and are carried off to Assam under false names. Married women are persuaded to desert their husbands and children, and are decoyed away under circumstances that make it practically impossible to trace them. District officers and non-officials, Europeans and natives, missionaries and managers of collieries, all alike bear testimony to the growing prevalence of kidnapping in all its various forms, and to the misery and crime which it occasions. It has been said that if the Magistrates and the police do their duty properly the worst cases, at all events, would be prevented or detected and punished, and it is in this view that the Bengal Government lately deputed a special officer of the police to conduct an inquiry into such cases in Chota Nagpore. This view, however, leaves a great part of the question out of sight. The police can only interfere to prevent the commission of some offence or to detect the culprit when an offence has been committed. But in many cases, and those some of the worst class, the acts of the recruiters, wicked and immoral though they are, do not constitute an offence at all. It is not an offence to entice a married woman to leave her husband and her children and become a coolie for five years or longer in Assam! It is not an offence to persuade a grown-up son to desert his parents and leave them destitute, even though his labour may be their only means of support! Even when some recruiter, grown bolder from impunity, does actually overstep the limits of the law, the chances in his favour are overwhelming. The expense of legal proceedings is almost always prohibitive to the classes concerned, while the entire freedom which the "free" recruiters enjoy from official supervision, and the ease with which names, castes and residences can be changed, render it almost hopeless to obtain a satisfactory clue.'

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR inquired what was the date of the article which the Hon'ble Member had just read, as a great deal would depend on that.

The Hon'ble DR. KASHBEHARY GHOSE said that he could not say for certain, but it was more than two years old.

The Hon'ble Member continued:—"The Secretary of State also, I may mention in passing, in his despatch No. 13, dated the 11th February, 1892, expresses his opinion that strong measures are required to amend the existing state of things. Experience shows that local registration would, in a great measure, check the abuses to which I have just referred, and my assertion is amply supported by official records.

'Emigration,' writes Colonel Samuels, 'is, I fear, in most cases tantamount to desertion of home and relatives. In my long experience of these districts I have known many instances of men and women in depôts before they were registered being persuaded by their relatives to return to their homes. To permit of this being done would be no real interference with the system of free emigration, whilst it would give every man and woman a chance of changing his or her mind before it was too late to do so, and afford a guarantee that every one who emigrated did so deliberately and without undue influence and deception.'

"The Government of Bengal in their letter say:

'The only other advantage claimed for the Assam contracts is that, in the districts of recruitment, labourers, when brought before a registrar for the execution of their engagements, may be dissuaded from emigration by their friends and relatives, as suggested by Mr. Lyall in the observations quoted in paragraph 15 of this letter. The Lieutenant-Governor is inclined to believe that this is the objection which really weighs with many who oppose initial verification, though it is kept somewhat in the background, the allegation as to increased cost being calculated to carry more weight with those unfamiliar with the subject. It is an argument which does not commend itself to the judgment of officers in Bengal, or to the inhabitants of this province, who, on the contrary, hold that, considering the large sums paid to every professional recruiter or occasional crimp who can persuade a labourer to execute the contract in question, some opportunity of knowing what is going on should be afforded to others interested. The subject is generally treated with special reference to wives induced by arkatis to desert their families in consequence of some quarrel which, had it not been for the facilities afforded by the Assam contract system, would have been soon made up; the case of children is also frequently quoted, and many persons consider that in such instances registration should be insisted on, whether labour-contracts are executed or not.'

"In support of my contention I would beg to quote another passage from paragraph 14 of the same letter:—

'The Lieutenant-Governor is distinctly of opinion that, under the circumstances, Dhubri is not the most suitable station for putting labourers under statutory engagements.

The best place for explaining a contract to a person liable to be deceived as to its terms—say to a Lohardaga woman—is not to be sought where her language is little known, or the officer who has to make her understand the terms of the engagement is hurried by a multiplicity of engagements; and she would be more of a free agent, to accept or reject the agreement at discretion, in her own district, among friends, than at a strange station, where she cannot find employment or ask for alms in the language of the country, and from which she can see little prospect of getting away, as she has no money to pay the return fare.'

"Mr. Westland was also emphatically of opinion that the coolie recruited under the present unlicensed system is not in any sense a free agent, and that the power to put a labourer under a penal contract in the labour-districts should be withdrawn. Mr. Lyall, late Officiating Commissioner, Assam Valley, in an inspection report recorded:—

'Once the emigrants get to Dhubri, they have cast the die and are started on their journey. It is too late for them to reconsider the matter. In the district of recruitment they would be subject to influences which would often make them change their minds. The contractor would thus lose a good many of his coolies and have to charge the planter a higher price for the remainder. The cost per head to the employer would, I think, certainly rise. At present his cost varies considerably. I have heard as high a figure as R110 mentioned, and as low a one as R57 (the latter for coolies for a garden in Sibsagar); but, whatever it is now, it would be higher under the other system.

"Can the ordinary law or executive action, however vigorous, deal with such cases or cope successfully with the abuses disclosed in these official documents? Initial registration alone, in my humble opinion, would furnish an adequate remedy and effectively check the malpractices notoriously resorted to by the recruiter under the present system, or rather no system.

"I now propose to deal with the objection to compulsory registration based on the ground that such a procedure would be altogether alien to the principle of free emigration, and, if I thought that the restriction which I propose would have the effect of checking free emigration properly so-called, I should be the last person to advocate such a proceeding. But, if by free emigration is meant the spontaneous and unsolicited emigration of natives of other parts of India to the labour-districts to work under the ordinary law, the amendment proposed by me, although curtailing the license of the so-called free recruiter, would really facilitate free recruiting by insuring that the emigrant should really be a free agent. It would give him an opportunity of declaring his intention to emigrate to some constituted authority—the course which, we are told, an emigrant in England takes when he goes to an emigration office and expresses an intention to emigrate. The delay incident on registration would afford the parent or husband some chance of recovering his child or wife. The repatriation clauses contained in the Bill would probably go some way towards mitigating the abuses attendant on uncontrolled recruiting. But, as Mr. Grimley points out, the arm of the law is long, but its movement is sometimes remarkably slow, and, he might have added, not always sure; and it would be a very poor consolation for a husband to recover his lost wife or a parent his missing son two or three years after their disappearance. Prevention is, as we all know, better than cure; and surely there never was a case in which preventive measures were more urgently called for in the interests of those who stand most in need of the protection of the State.

"I have one word to add with reference to the supposed difficulty of distinguishing between a new immigrant and a bonâ fide resident in the labour-districts. With the care which, we are assured, is exercised at Dhubri before the labourer is put under contract, and the rules under which free emigrants proceed to Dhubri under Act I of 1889, it ought not surely to be at all difficult to distinguish between the two classes, and even Mr. Quinton admits that the difficulty would not be insurmountable—an opinion in which, I think, everybody would be inclined to agree. My amendment, I should add, differs from the proposal of the Bengal Government in insisting only on the condition that the labourer should be a resident without defining the period of residence by a hard-and-fast rule.

"I must add that to recognise and to enforce by legislation the necessity for supervision in contracts entered into outside the labour-districts, when, in the words of Sir Dennis Fitzpatrick, the emigrant is still close to his home and within hail of his own people, and to neglect such supervision when he is carried to Assam, to him a foreign country, is, I must say, with the greatest deference, both inconsistent and indefensible. Emigration which is really free may safely be left without fetters, but the emigrant who is assisted to emigrate under present conditions in order that he may enter into a labour-contract cannot properly be described as a free labourer, simply because he is carried to Assam before entering into any engagement.

"It has always been the policy of the State to control the recruitment of such emigrants by law—a policy recognised in the restrictions imposed on the contractors' as well as the sirdari system. It was probably expected when the Act was passed in 1882 that free emigration would take the same form in India as it has in other civilized countries, the employers of labour supplying the place of the emigration societies. But emigration has not unfortunately assumed any such shape notwithstanding the system of Dhubri contracts. It has only served to enrich a lawless body of men termed arkatis, to the detriment of legitimate recruiting, and hurtful alike to the employer and labourer.' As observed by Mr. Stuart, Chairman of the Indian Tea Association, the arkatis have by their malpractices done much harm to the cause of emigration, and, unless their malpractices are effectively checked, will do still greater harm to it.

"I propose to sum up briefly my reasons for inviting the Council to accept my amendment. First, the existence of grave abuses in the system of recruitment by Act I of 1882 is undeniable, and must in the interests of the people concerned be remedied. The control which can be exercised under the ordinary law cannot reach the evil in some of its worst forms, and the amendments proposed by Government cannot be regarded as adequate for the purpose. They may scotch the evil, but they cannot kill it. Secondly, there is no reasonable ground for making a distinction between labourers who contract near their homes and those who are carried to Assam for the purpose of placing them under labour-contracts there. I ought perhaps to say that there are stronger grounds for placing under control the latter class of emigrants. Thirdly, there is no danger of such restrictions as I propose enhancing in the slightest appreciable degree the price of labour or checking the progress of free emigration properly so-called. Indeed, I might venture to assert without much rashness that with the removal of the abuses which have grown up under the Dhubri system the occupation of the arkati would be gone, the price of labour would fall, and in the course of time free immigration properly so-called would take the place of the present system, which has certainly not been a very pronounced success, if, indeed, it has not brought emigration under all forms into not altogether undeserved discredit.

"In conclusion, I must say that there are very few laws in the Indian Statute-book the policy of which has been more keenly debated than the Emigration Act which it is now proposed to amend. It would serve no useful purpose to revive the memory of the controversies which have marked the whole course of legislation on the subject. On one point only we find a remarkable unanimity of opinion, namely, that exceptional legislation of the kind under discussion must be regarded as merely temporary and should not be maintained even a day longer than is absolutely essential for the protection of the classes concerned. While loyally accepting the conclusion arrived at by the Government, after the fullest and most anxious enquiry, that the time is not yet ripe for the repeal of penal contracts, I can only repeat the hope so often expressed that with the improvements in the means of communication between the recruiting and labour-districts, and the increasing knowledge of Assam life by labourers in the recruiting areas, the necessity for special legislation will soon cease and the relations of employers and labourers will be placed on the ordinary basis regulating their mutual rights and obligations. There is only one other observation that I should like to make. Emigration laws have been denounced in very severe terms, not only by some of my countrymen, but also by European public servants in responsible positions. But the large mass of official literature which has gathered round the Assam coolie must convince everybody that special legislation is resorted to not merely in the interests of the tea-industry, but also in the interests of the people at large, as tending to promote emigration from those parts of the country in which the wages are low and the people liable to periodical famines. The evils which have crept into the system must not lead us to forget the good that emigration has done. They must not lead us to forget that the districts of the North-Eastern Frontier, once a wilderness, have now been covered with plantations which, while adding to the wealth of the country, support thousands of labourers, and where many of them have found comfortable homes. Then, again, the benefits secured by the Act to the labourer ought to be set off against the penalties by which the performance of his part of the contract is secured. It must also be borne in mind that some of the evils which have revealed themselves in connection with the system are inseparable from all emigrations conducted on a large scale among the poor and ignorant, and, although I cannot help thinking that local registration would seem to be as nearly complete a remedy as can be devised for the growing evils of unregulated recruitment, I am bound to admit that the Bill now under discussion contains provisions which would to some extent reduce the evils which have sprung up, and that with the more energetic action of the executive, including the strengthening of the inspection system which has been promised by Sir Philip Hutchins, the condition of the labourer in the tea-gardens would be improved in a very large measure."

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS said:—"I have already indicated briefly why the Government of India cannot on any account agree to what is called initial registration. I am afraid I must now deal with the matter at considerable length. Reluctant as I am to trespass further on the patience of the Council, I feel that it is of the utmost importance that the views of the Government of India on this vexed question should be clearly understood, and that, if possible, it should now be finally determined. I propose to deal with it first in a general manner, and then with especial reference to Dr. Rashbehary Ghose's amendments.

"Registration, as the Indian Association itself has truly observed, is opposed to free emigration which we wish to promote. The two are incompatible. It is not possible, as Mr. Grimley asserts, that registration will facilitate free recruitment. For let us see what registration means. It means that no one is to be allowed to enter into a contract to labour in Assam without having first in his or her own district, or as near thereto as may be, gone before a Magistrate and registered himself or he self as willing to proceed to Assam for that purpose. On the other hand, free or privately assisted emigration means that the labourers find their own way up to the labour-districts without any official interference, and are then and there put under contract if willing. The registered labourer—by which I mean one registered under the Act or under any system under which registration can practically and equitably be enforced, the case would be different under the present amendment—the labourer registered under the Act, though not actually under contract, is under an obligation to execute one when called upon to do so, and can be fined or imprisoned if he refuses; he has therefore ceased to be free. But the free labourer is under no obligation at all until he has actually executed a contract at Dhubri or elsewhere; till then he is absolutely free.

"The two things being thus, as I have said, incompatible, my first objection to making registration compulsory, or clogging it with a condition which makes it practically compulsory, is that it will throw back all emigration into leading-strings, and reverse the policy which has been consistently followed by the Government of India ever since 1873.

"For Mr. Grimley and others (I quote Mr. Grimley again as to some extent representing the district officers of the recruiting districts) are quite mistaken in supposing that the free emigration spoken of in 1873 and 1882 meant something essentially different from the privately assisted emigration which now prevails. Take, for instance, the report of the Commissioners upon whose advice Act I of 1882 was framed. This mentions at the outset that the Bengal Government had in 1873 'recognized in some degree the propriety of encouraging . . . free recruiting,' and then proceeds to define free recruitment as 'a system of inducing natives of other parts of India to emigrate, and furnishing them with the means of doing so, carried on by or on behalf of employers without any supervision or control on the part of Government officers.' The Committee advised that this should not only be permitted, as it had been permitted under certain restrictions since 1873, but that those restrictions should be removed, and that free or unregistered recruitment should be encouraged as much as possible by the declaration of the competency of an unregistered recruit to execute a labour-contract after arriving in the labour-districts. So, in addressing the Secretary of State in August, 1880, the Government of India wrote that 'the most important change which the present Act effected was the encouragement of assisted (sometimes called free) emigration by relieving it from legal trammels until the coolies reach the labour districts.' It was thus clearly recognized in 1882 that, in order to afford to employers a sufficient inducement to incur the outlay of taking up free or unregistered emigrants to the tea-gardens, it was essential that such emigrants should be permitted to enter into local contracts.

"I would here ask the Council to consider the happy results which this policy has produced in the Surma Valley Districts, and the disastrous consequences which would ensue if it were now to be reversed. The system of Act immigration and penal contracts is gradually dying out in the districts of Sylhet and Cachar. It is still necessary, in the interests of the administration, to maintain the Government control which the Act renders possible, but employers are voluntarily giving up the use of the penal provisions which bear against the coolie. This is especially remarkable in Sylhet. There, even in 1886, 64 per cent. of the adult immigrants were taken up free, while of the whole adult labour force only 27·6 per cent. were under Act contracts. In 1891 the percentage of free immigrants had risen to 94, while the percentage of adult labourers under Act contracts had fallen below 15. The corresponding figures for Cachar are little less remarkable: free immigrants were 26 per cent. of the whole in 1886, and 41 per cent. in 1891: Act labourers had been 30·7 per cent. in 1886, but had fallen as low as 13½ per cent. in 1891. It is clear from these figures that the question whether the Act may not be withdrawn from at least a large part of the Surma Valley will arise very shortly in the natural course of events, and any change in the law which would force employers to make a larger use of its provisions is much to be deprecated. Yet this would be the inevitable result if they are not to be allowed to recruit free emigrants and to exercise their discretion, after the recruits reach the gardens, whether they should be put under contract or not.

"My next objection is that initial registration has been condemned on its own merits.

"The point has been argued as if the only objection to compulsory registration was the trifling fee which it involves, but if I have ever spoken of its expensive character it was certainly not any such legitimate charges which I had in mind.

"It is not at all true that registration was dispensed with in order to cheapen the supply of labour. 'Its main evil'—His Honour Sir Charles Elliott once wrote, and he was only summing up in his graphic style what the records show—'Its main evil was the great delay and annoyance experienced by the recruits, the difficulty of getting anyone in the Collector's cutcherry to attend to the business, the necessity of bribing every one all round, and the danger either that the whole registration was done so perfunctorily that it was no safeguard whatever, or else that it would be done by some one who was fanatically persuaded that no Hindu could possibly emigrate except under fraudulent enticement or compulsion.'

"The same question came up again in 1883, in connection with recruiting for the Colonies. A lengthy enquiry was made by Colonel Pitcher in the North-Western Provinces and by Mr. Grierson in Bengal. I find Mr. Grierson writing as follows:—

'The present system of registration is just about as bad as it can be, and so also is the way in which this system is carried out . . . The divergencies of practice from the authorized system have all arisen from one cause: the wrong man has been made to do the work. A Magistrate's business is not to keep complex registers but to look after the general welfare of the people. . . . Registration is an art in itself. It requires years of training to teach an officer to do the work . . . The registration of the coolie's contract, if properly carried out, requires just as much care and experience as the registration of the deed of sale of a whole estate.'

"At Dhubri, I may mention, the work is really carried out as an art, under an experienced medical commissioned officer and a Deputy Commissioner who regards it as one of his chief functions. They are experts in the business, and this is why we consider registration at Dhubri so much more effective a safeguard against fraudulent or irregular recruitment than registration in the recruiting districts. The security against false personation, and changing of coolies after registration and other similar malpractices, is much greater at Dhubri than in the recruiting districts; for the emigrants are under official supervision from the moment they reach that station; and shortly after the execution of their contracts they are placed on the steamer in the presence of the Deputy Commissioner or a medical officer. Each batch of emigrants are identified with their way-bills at the time of embarkation and are then placed in charge of the master and medical officer of the steamer.

"Three results were clearly elicited by Mr. Grierson's enquiries:—

(1) That there was a general hostility on the part of officials to the recruiter, who was frequently impeded in most objectionable ways by the police and underlings of the cutcherris.

(2) That the magisterial officers have not sufficient time to attend properly to registration business; and, if they had not time then to attend to the few Colonial emigrants, how could they possibly hope to cope with the thousands now proceeding to Assam? In 1891, nearly 25,000 emigrants went up from Bengal to Assam.

(3) That the verification before the Magistrate was by no means a sure preventive of malpractices.

"And this brings me to the subject of malpractices, which, so far as I can understand, form the main, if not the only, ground on which a return to initial registration is demanded. It is remarkable that the allegation of abuses is always made with regard to Dhubri: we hardly ever hear of them in connection with the Surma Valley, where the number of free emigrants going right up to the gardens, without any official control except for sanitary purposes, is so large. The number of complaints, however, was certainly at one time startling, and there was no doubt that many of the best district officers had taken up the position that free recruiting gave rise to all sorts of abuses. This led me in 1889 to make a very careful analysis of the various charges, so far as particulars were given, and the first conclusion to which I came was that, in their laudable anxiety to protect the people entrusted to their care, many excellent officers had imbibed an unconscious prejudice against free recruitment. I have since found that this is no new discovery, but has all along been recognised. For instance, in 1886, the then Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, Sir Rivers Thompson, wrote as follows:—

'In reporting upon cases of this kind there can be little doubt that the judgment of most district officers is likely to be warped by a not unnatural prejudice against free emigration. Formerly, they controlled every step of the emigrants' movements; now they know nothing about them, except through complaints of abuses which only come to their knowledge after the emigrants have left their jurisdiction. Again, the people of the recruiting districts, particularly those classes of landlords whose opinion is likely to influence the district officers, are violently opposed to any form of emigration, on the ground that it takes away from the district large numbers of the landless classes, and thus tends to raise the wages of agricultural labourers.'

"My second conclusion may also be summed up in the words of the same distinguished Head of the Bengal Government, who wrote in the letter from which I have already quoted:—

'The Lieutenant-Governor is unable to find in them (the cases reported) any special form of abuse which can be definitely put down to the system of free emigration as distinguished from the protected emigration under the Act of 1873. The abuses, such as they are, are of the same kind.'

"I found also that the low ratio of convictions indicated that many of the complaints were frivolous or unfounded, that the figures included many cases in which the coolie was the accused and not the accuser, that all cases connected with emigration had been mixed up together, including assaults and even charges for absconding with advances after registration. Indeed, it seemed as if every case of a disappearance were at once attributed to the machinations of Assam arkatis, just as suspicious deaths used to be put down to snake-bite! Many of the malpractices which I found graphically described as the work of an arkati or free recruiter actually implied that the victim must have been registered; and yet the remedy suggested was more registration.

"As an instance of the inefficacy of registration in checking malpractices and preventing unsuitable coolies from being sent up, I may refer to the Rowta case reported in the Bengal Government's letter of 25th February, 1893, which was submitted to the Select Committee. Sixty-two coolies were sent up after registration in Calcutta, and after executing contracts under the Act, to the Rowta garden. They were described in their contracts as Ghasi by caste, and as coming from the Sonthal Parganas, a district from which good recruits are ordinarily obtained. Seven months later only 16 were left on the garden; 26 had deserted, 16 had died, the contracts of 6 were cancelled for permanent physical incapacity; the remainder were a sickly and feeble set. It was found when they reached the garden that they were not Sonthals at all, but coolies from the North-West Provinces of a low and sickly type. Their castes and addresses had been misstated. Altogether the case was a most distressing one. I had carefully gone into it before the Select Committee sat, and the conclusion I came to was that the coolies had been personated at the time of registration, or that they had been changed before despatch to the labour-districts. At all events, more registration would not have prevented the occurrence: the men had not only been registered, but had actually been put under engagement in Bengal. The fault lay entirely with the Calcutta agents, who had been invited by the contractors to inspect the men, but had neglected to do so. As I explained on a former occasion, we can only reach the agents through the gardens. The Bill on the table will give very stringent control over the gardens, and has been framed on the principle that they are responsible. The owner of the Rowta garden should, I think, change his agents, and no other planters should employ a firm which has been guilty of such gross and culpable negligence.

"Now, what are the malpractices to which we are most anxious to put a stop? When I introduced this Bill I endeavoured to show that most of the abuses in recruitment complained of could be, and had been, suppressed by vigorous executive action under the ordinary law. I mentioned that in 1891 there were only 13 complaints made by coolies throughout the Bhagalpur and Chota Nagpore Divisions. The only cases calling for anything like special measures of repression were, I said, cases in which the labourer, though under the influence of enticement or misrepresentation, is nevertheless a willing emigrant at the time he would be brought up for registration. For such cases obviously registration is no remedy at all. Even if it were possible to secure that every emigrant should be registered within his own district, there would still be nothing to prevent his giving a false name and address, and nothing to prevent personation. I submit that it is impossible now for man or woman to be taken all the way to Dhubri against their own will. The fact seems to be that, speaking generally, a recruiter does not go through the trouble and expense of registration where he believes the coolie will go with him willingly, in which case registration would be superfluous: but, where the coolie has been in any way deceived, the recruiter would naturally seek to establish a hold on him by means of registration, and in this class of cases registration would be positively mischievous.

"These remarks also apply in some measure to cases in which there has been a disruption of family ties. I cannot regard it as an unmixed evil that an ill-used member of a family should have some means of escape, and if he or she, being 16 years old, is determined to emigrate, I do not see why it should be in the power of a Registering-officer to say no. But, as a matter of fact, it would be easy to take a person before an officer, known to be perfunctory or over-worked, and get him or her registered; and then there is no room for a change of mind. Theoretically, registration can only be effected in the district for which a recruiter may be licensed; but he would have no difficulty in passing on his willing recruits to the next district, or in registering them under false names or as coming from villages not really their own. It would be impossible to keep back every case in which the emigrant was not known until enquiry could be made. It would be equally impossible to prevent a runaway from presenting himself for registration at Calcutta, as having come down to obtain work in a mill or the like and been recruited here.

"I have already referred to the Chhattisgarh cases and shown that they do not in any way controvert the position that such abuses as do exist are best met by vigilance on the part of the executive officers—in the recruiting districts, on the road to Assam and especially at the halting-places fixed under the Bengal Act of 1889, and lastly at Dhubri itself or elsewhere in the labour-districts. At Dhubri special precautions have always been taken with regard to women travelling alone and young persons. And under the present Bill the contract of a person found to have been improperly recruited can be cancelled at any time, however formally executed.

"It has been suggested, and if I rightly understood my hon'ble friend who moved the amendment he would support the suggestion, that we should make inducement to emigrate by misrepresentation and intimidation punishable under the criminal law; but I am decidedly opposed to the manufacture of technical offences. The Penal Code says what misrepresentations or intimidation can properly be treated as offences, and any one who comes under its provisions will doubtless be severely dealt with. It is undoubtedly an offence already to confine or restrain an unregistered coolie against his own will. Misrepresentation or intimidation is very commonly falsely alleged by the coolies to cover and excuse their own change of mind. The conditions of life in Assam are now well known throughout the recruiting districts, and emigrants proceeding there fall into a stream of companions where little else is talked about. It is hardly possible that the effect of misrepresentations can be maintained all the way to Dhubri, but of this the recruiter takes the risk. I regard with some suspicion the graphic pictures of arkatis worming themselves into families and taking advantage of disputes between husband and wife, but no doubt they are ready enough to assist people who have already quarrelled with their families and wish to get away; but here they have to risk the very probable contingency that before the recruit reaches Dhubri he may change his mind and have to be repatriated at the recruiter's cost. This is in itself a serious punishment, and I would not add any other. As for the recruit himself, it is surely better for him to have time to cool down during his journey, instead of being hurried fresh from his quarrel into the presence of a Registering-officer and there finally committing himself. Under the provisions of the present Bill, there will be no doubt about his right to repatriation.

"I venture to think that emigration to Assam may be compared to that which goes on from the south of India to Ceylon and to the Straits Settlements. When I first came out to India complaints of malpractices on the part of the recruiters—kanganis we called them there—in connection with emigration to Ceylon were very common. But they gradually died away and registration became obsolete. Even to this day, or at all events till very recently, the law of Ceylon recognized penal contracts, and yet there is a constant flow of perfectly free emigrants into the island. As communications improve Assam may be reasonably expected to come under the same conditions. So again in the Straits Settlements the law provides for penal contracts, but if there is anything at all resembling registration in India, it is of the simplest possible character and confined to the port of embarkation.

"I will now deal with the particular amendment which has been proposed by my hon'ble and learned friend Dr. Rashbehary Ghose. Unfortunately he did not attempt to formulate it when the Bill was in Select Committee, and I have only been able to glean his intentions from the notice of the amendments, which reached me late last evening, and from what he has just orally stated. It seemed to me that his explanation of the real scope and effect of his proposals was of a very meagre character indeed.

"It is proposed, as I understand, (1) that any unlicensed recruiter—that is, any person recruiting otherwise than under Chapters III and IV of the Act—may register his recruits before the Registering-officer of the area in which the intending emigrant 'resides'; and (2) that no person, other than a 'resident' of the labour-districts, shall be eligible to enter into a local contract under section 112 of the Act unless he has been so registered.

"It seems to me that the Hon'ble Member must have moved these amendments rather for the purpose of raising the general question than with any intention, even if the Council should decide in his favour, that his amendments should be adopted as establishing a final and practicable scheme of initial registration.

The words 'reside' and 'residence' are singularly vague. I presume that it is not intended that any person who has resided a few days or months in a recruiting area or a labour-district shall be eligible to be registered or to enter into a contract. The Hon'ble Member said that he had purposely abstained from laying down any hard-and-fast rule, but I submit that we must have something definite and capable of being understood.

"It seems to be considered by the Hon'ble Member—and I have seen the same statement made in certain newspapers—that the proposal we are now considering will not discourage free (unregistered) emigration, or impede the growth of free (non-contract) labour, because it will still be open to the employer to engage free or unregistered recruits and to bring them up to his estate and employ them as free labourers. Only he will have to finally exercise this option, not, as at present, after the recruits have reached the labour-district, but before they leave the recruiting districts.

"I venture to assert that the whole course of experience is against this contention. The argument is not a new one. As far as I was able to follow my hon'ble friend, he has done little more than reiterate the case which was put forward by the Bengal Government in 1890. This was fully considered by the Government of India, and in our published Despatch of 5th October, 1891, reasons were given at length to show that the proposals submitted would in fact throw back the progress which is now gradually being made towards free emigration and free labour, and delay the time when the Act could safely be abandoned. The part of the Despatch to which I refer is paragraphs 15 to 26 and covers eight pages. It is too long to quote. I will therefore merely give the substance of it as briefly as possible considering the intricate nature of the subject.

"Taking first the Surma Valley, the experience hitherto gained has shown that registered emigration necessarily carries with it a general system of Act-labour. As registered emigration developes into privately assisted emigration, this general system of Act-contracts passes into an intermediate stage, such contracts becoming less common and being superseded by less stringent forms of contracts. Act XIII of 1859 furnishes this intermediate stage of contracts in the Surma Valley. As privately assisted emigration passes into unassisted, that is, unsolicited and spontaneous emigration, there follows a system of entirely free labour without any contracts at all. There are many gardens in the Surma Valley where this final stage of free labour has been reached. But experience has shown that emigration must pass through its various stages to the final stage of unassisted emigration before the stage of entirely free labour becomes generally practicable. If we now throw back the privately assisted sirdari emigration, which has become the regular practice in the Surma Valley, to the stage of registered emigration, we shall also throw back the intermediate stage of contracts to the stage of strictly Act-contracts.

"For various reasons, which were fully stated in the Despatch to which I have referred, the development has not gone so far in the Assam Valley as in the Surma Valley; but the first stage in the development has been reached in the establishment of privately assisted emigration with Act-contracts at Dhubri. Now, as was recognized by the Commission which prepared the first draft of Act I of 1882, the chief inducement which employers have to bring up a free or unregistered emigrant is that they are competent to execute an Act-contract with them after their arrival on the garden; and their chief reason for resorting to free emigration is to avoid initial registration. It is entirely contrary to experience to suppose that, under the conditions which these amendments would bring about, employers will on any large scale avail themselves of the option of both bringing up their recruits as free or unregistered emigrants and employing them as free labourers—that is, without any form of penal contract. The sole reason why employers now resort to unregistered emigration is because, by doing this, they avoid the trouble, vexations and delay, and the irregular exactions and opposition from subordinate officials, which surround registered emigration; while, on the other hand, they have still, in suitable cases, the security of the contract system, and can, if necessary, place the recruits on Act-contracts on their arrival in the labour-districts. When the coolies arrive on a garden in the Surma Valley, if they are steady and well-behaved (and especially if they come in families) and are not likely to desert or give trouble, the employer often does not care to place them under Act-contracts. If, however, they seem to require the stricter discipline of the Act, they are placed under Act-contracts. But under the proposal now before us the employer will have to decide whether or not he will place the recruits under Act-contracts before they leave the recruiting district, and this practically means that he must decide at the time when he sends his sirdar down to recruit. Not knowing the kind of coolies that will be brought up—whether they will be well-behaved or likely to give trouble, and whether they will come in families or as solitary individuals—he will not be able, as a general rule, to take the risk of deciding to employ them without Act-contracts, and will therefore ordinarily have to give general instructions for registration. And, if he goes to this much trouble and expense—just what he wishes to avoid when he recruits outside the Act—he will, in most cases, at once give his sirdar a certificate, and thus get a legal hold over the recruiter and the recruits at the outset by having contracts executed in the recruiting district. For it must be remembered that under these amendments, if I understand them rightly, although the omission to register in the area of residence involves a disability to make a local contract, the registration observed creates no obligation. The registered emigrant may decline to proceed to the labour-district or to execute a contract, and he will not be punishable for this, except in certain cases to which perhaps the Penal Code may apply. The consequence will be that employers, instead of undertaking privately assisted recruiting, will go back to Act-recruiting.

"These remarks apply particularly to the Surma Valley. In the Assam Valley, where only an intermediate stage between registered emigration and privately assisted emigration has been reached, there will à fortiori be a similar retrogression, and further progress towards free emigration will be checked.

"I must apologise for having troubled the Council at such length on this point, but it seemed to me important to show clearly that the proposal is in fact likely to throw back the emigration and labour system

"The Hon'ble Member has referred to a proposal made by the late Mr. Quinton for restoring the Goalpara District to the status of a recruiting district which it occupied before 1882, and for restricting contracts there to recruits originally registered in the actual area of their recruitment. Our objections to this proposal also have been fully stated in our published letter of the 5th October, 1891, to the Chief Commissioner of Assam. But I would point out that Mr. Quinton's proposal is an entirely different one from that now before us, as it involved no interference with the execution of Act-contracts on a tea-garden. It merely made Goalpara a recruiting district, but still allowed unregistered emigrants to execute local contracts under sections. 111 and 112. Besides, as we pointed out, Mr. Quinton was not personally in favour of this proposal; he merely suggested it as a substitute for initial registration in case the Government of India should determine to abolish the present Dhubri system. We have, however, decided to maintain that system. Later on, when I visited Assam at the end of 1891, I found that the planters as a body were strongly opposed to any interference with the existing arrangements at Dhubri; they entirely approved of the conclusion at which the Government of India had arrived independently. They had then had full time to understand Mr. Quinton's alternative scheme, the effect of which they may not have fully understood when it was first put before them.

"Again, the main object of Mr. Quinton's proposal was to compel unlicensed contractors and arkatis to take out licenses and thus to get them under proper control. The present proposal, so far as I can see, does not profess to do anything to bring these people under control, and it appears to be hoped that some accident or other will bring about this result.

"To return to the amendments—I would ask if the proposal to restrict registration to the area of the recruit's residence is at all fair or reasonably practicable? I have already said something upon this topic. The Act now contemplates that a recruit shall be registered in the actual area of recruitment. Yet we know that this is not, and cannot always be, done. It is hardly possible for a Registering-officer, without great delay in making inquiries, to decide whether an intending emigrant actually resides in his district or sub-division. The largest number of labourers recruited under the Act are now registered in Calcutta, but they do not live there, and many of them are doubtless brought there for the purpose by arkatis and others. It would be a direct discouragement to emigration if we absolutely forbid the registration of such persons and thus declare them incompetent to enter into Act-contracts. A coolie from the North-Western Provinces or from Madras might spontaneously come to Calcutta—or say that he had so come—and offer himself for registration; I submit it would be unreasonable to refuse to register him.

"But, even if all this could be overcome, what provision does the amendment make to ensure that the work of registration shall be properly done? That there shall be no delay or vexatious obstruction to the recruiter? That recruits shall actually be registered in the area of their residence? That false names and addresses and misdescriptions will not be given? That false personation will not be resorted to, and that coolies will not be changed after registration? These are not mere captious objections I have had to refer to them before. Repeated and exhaustive enquiries, and even the reports of officers who are in favour of initial registration, show that these evils are practically inseparable from any system of registration.

"The difficulty of distinguishing 'resident' and 'non-resident' emigrants in the labour-districts arises from the fact that there is not only a large and annually increasing domiciled immigrant population in the Province, largely composed of persons of unsettled and migratory habits moving about from district to district, but in addition to them there are new emigrants going up every year in large numbers whose history it would be difficult to trace. There are also old emigrants going backwards and forwards between their homes and the Assam gardens. The difficulty will naturally be increased when railway communication is established and has led to more rapid traffic between Assam and other Provinces. It is for those who propose the restriction of local contracts to residents of the labour-districts to show what is meant by the term 'resident,' and what steps should be taken to prevent unregistered non-residents from evading disability to contracts imposed on them. The amendments proposed seem to leave this to accident. It must be remembered, too, that under these amendments licensed recruiting will not be required; any unlicensed recruiter will be able to produce a recruit before a Registering-officer.

"All these matters must be foreseen and provided against in a manner which is not detrimental to emigration. Unless such special provision is made, the scheme will certainly be retrograde, dilatory, vexatious and expensive; but I venture to submit that it will not be effectual in attaining its object, which I understand to be the prevention of abuses. We cannot embark upon novel legislation merely in the hope that it will reform the system, and leave it to accident to bring about the desired result.

"It must be remembered that the proposal would entirely disturb the existing course of emigration throughout Assam. Nearly all emigrants to the Assam Valley execute contracts at Dhubri without previous registration; nearly all emigrants to the Surma Valley go up to the gardens as free labourers, and a large number of them enter into local contracts.

"We cannot deal with this question with exclusive reference to Bengal—we have also to consider the effect of the proposal on other Provinces. I will first take Assam. I see at once three awkward results. In the first place, residents of districts other than the labour-districts will be incompetent to enter into a labour-contract. I understand that Garos, Nagas, Khasis and other hillmen work on the tea-gardens. Secondly, suppose that unregistered emigrants were taken up on a large scale and did not enter into local contracts under the Act; they would still almost certainly be placed on some other kind of penal contract, enforceable under section 492 of the Penal Code or Act XIII of 1859, with the result that during their first few years in Assam, and until they had become 'residents,'—that is to say, at the very time when they most need it,—they would be deprived of the sanitary and other protection afforded by Government to Act-labourers. Thirdly, how are we to distinguish between 'residents' and 'non-residents' of labour-districts? At what period after his arrival in a labour-district would an emigrant become a 'resident'? How could the Magistrate or Inspector, or even the employer, say whether any particular coolie was a resident or a non-resident? If he chose to represent himself as a resident, could he afterwards turn round and get his contract cancelled by proving that he had made a false statement? What steps would be taken to prevent unregistered emigrants being placed under contracts as residents?

"Let us next take the case of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh. In 1891 more than 10,000 emigrants went from these provinces to Assam. Seven thousand of them went as free labourers. An excellent system of family emigration has been established between these provinces and the Surma Valley gardens, and no abuses in recruitment are complained of in connection with it. The Hon'ble Mr. Woodburn has just informed us that his province is perfectly satisfied with the present state of things. These amendments would check, if they did not wholly stop, this most desirable description of free emigration, and the effect of the proposal would be the same in every other recruiting province. No free emigrant could enter into a local contract, and no opening would be left for the growth of the free emigration system.

"I submit then, again, as I did before, that, with or without initial registration, abuses in the recruiting system cannot be kept in check without vigorous and sustained executive precautions, while with such precautions initial registration is unnecessary. I have shown that such abuses have already been reduced within very narrow limits in Bengal by executive action, and that, as a supplement to executive action we now have the Bengal Act, I of 1889, which authorizes the Local Government to frame rules for the transit of unregistered emigrants. The proper remedy, I venture to think, if anything more is necessary, is to amend these rules, or, if legislative action is really required, to amend the Bengal Act itself. That Act, or some similar enactment, might also be applied to any other recruiting province in which it may be required. It will thus be possible to take whatever measures are required in any particular province to check abuses without interfering with free emigration.

"I submit, then, in the first place, that abuses in recruitment are not now so serious or prevalent as to call for this retrograde step which is now proposed; secondly, that initial registration in any form, but particularly in the form proposed in the amendments before the Council, is not a proper remedy for such abuses; and, thirdly, that there are other and better available remedies, if any are wanted.

"For all these reasons I confidently ask the Council to accept the considered policy of the Government of India in this respect and their decision not to revert to the antiquated system of initial registration."

The Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM said:—"The Hon'ble Dr. Rashbehary Ghose has introduced my name as favouring initial registration, and in answer I may state that Mr. Grimley does refer to certain remarks written by me last year, and states that I supported his views with regard to initial registration. My remarks were enclosed with Mr. Ward's letter of the 12th August, 1892. What I said was that I should like to see the recruiting of all professional contractors and recruiters resident in Bengal brought under official control. But I strongly object to enforcing initial registration or imposing other restrictions, in the case of unlicensed garden-sirdars or coolies or other persons sent down from the Assam tea-gardens for the purpose of recruiting outside the Act.

"I also feel sure that all employers in the Assam Valley will strongly object to any change in the law which will prevent unregistered emigrants from entering into labour-contracts at Dhubri as at present, and I have not the slightest doubt that employers in the Surma Valley will be equally opposed to the prohibition of local contracts in the labour-districts in the case of unregistered emigrants. Other grave objections to initial registration are unnecessary delay, and various expenses in bringing the coolie into Court; again, the strong inducement that would be placed before sirdars and coolies to accept bribes and engage elsewhere; in fact, every registry office will become a recruiting centre, where there would always be people waiting ready to waylay and entice away labourers recruited by others; lastly, the certainty that free emigration, pure and simple, which has made such rapid strides in the Surma Valley, would receive a death-blow."

The Hon'ble MR. STEVENS said :—" I desire to explain that, though I sympathize heartily with the object of the Hon'ble Mover of the amendments, I am not inclined to vote for them as they stand. The literature of this subject shews that purely free emigration to the nearer districts is growing and has already attained considerable dimensions; and this most satisfactory form of emigration would be, I think, discouraged, if not suppressed altogether, if registration in the districts of original residence were insisted on in the case of persons adopting it. I would interfere no more than I would with emigration to the Duars. I have studied the papers to the best of my ability, and have listened to the remarks of Sir Philip Hutchins with the attention they deserve. As I do not propose to vote for the amendments, I will not take up the time of the Council by discussing them in detail. I will merely say that I have not been able to discern that the objections to initial registration, as it used to be conducted, were incapable of remedy, and, whatever defects Mr. Grierson found in the registration of emigrants to the Colonies, as it was conducted, I have not heard that registration for the Colonies has as a consequence been deferred till the arrival of the emigrants in the Colonies themselves, or even till they are put on boardship. And, as a matter of fact, registration is now required under Act I of 1882 in the case of coolies recruited by licensed recruiters, and even in the case of coolies recruited by garden-sirdars, under a system which is universally considered comparatively healthy. What is the object of this registration, and why does it remain in the Act at all? What I desire is to require initial registration in the case of contractors' coolies recruited outside the Act; for it is these who appear to me to require special protection. I confess that to devise a practical method of carrying out such registration requires more consideration than I have been able to give the subject, and I am not ready to offer to the Council a matured scheme. But I am so convinced that it is desirable in the interest of the labourers that the present Bill should be passed that I should be sorry to see its enactment postponed even for this important question."

The Hon'ble Mr. FAZULBHAI VISHRAM said :—" I have no desire to offer any lengthy remarks on this Bill; in fact, I shall be very brief considering the hour and what has already been said, especially because I consider that, on the whole, it is framed in a very fair spirit and with due regard to the interests both of the planter and the labourer. Almost everything that is necessary for the protection and well-being of the coolie has been provided for, and he is likely to be better off abroad than he can be at home. I have no particular experience of the labourers who go to Assam, but I do know a little about those who proceed to the Mauritius, and they generally profit by migrating from India. To a certain extent the Muhammadan pilgrims who yearly proceed from India to Arabia are cared for in a similar manner whilst travelling on board a steamer. Of this I can speak from personal experience, as our steamers often take pilgrims from Calcutta and Bombay to Jeddah, and we have under the Pilgrims Act to provide for them doctors, hospitals, medicines, disinfectants, tea, sugar, and many other comforts to which ordinarily they are strangers. The Hon'ble Mr. Mackay must know more about it than I do. The Emigration Act seems to have been conceived in the same liberal spirit as the Pilgrims Act, and very properly so; but there is one point about it which I thought was lost sight of, and that is the initial registration in the district where coolies are recruited. I may add that I had the advantage of conferring with certain gentlemen who are more or less authorities from the points of view of planters as well as labourers, and I have now come to the conclusion that the absence of a system of initial registration is likely to lead, and does lead, to malpractices on the part of recruiters. I need not now go into details about them. They are borne out by some of the planters themselves, and it is but right that some check should be provided against them. I intended, therefore, to submit this morning certain amendments with this view, and may still do so if Dr. Ghose's amendments (which reached me last night) do not meet the case.

" I was thinking of moving for a provision for the initial registration in sections 30, 31 and 32 of the Act, which really bear on the question of registration within the local area for which the recruiter is licensed, and in my humble opinion it would be more convenient to alter this to the area to which the labourer belongs than to insert the new section 7A and sub-sections proposed by Dr. Ghose.

"I should also like to have seen a provision made in the Bill for the appointment of a Protector of Emigrants, the same as there is for a Protector of Pilgrims under the Pilgrims Act, but I am now not prepared to propose anything under this head.

"On second thought, and after what has fallen from the Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins as regards the amendments in their present form, on further consideration I think I had, perhaps, better propose the amendments indicated by me, if I may be permitted to do so. I know the rules require three days' notice, but it must be borne in mind that I received the Bill and the Select Committee's report officially on Monday last, and by the time I could go through them it was Wednesday, that is, yesterday. Hence there was no time to send in any formal amendments beforehand."

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS said:—"I ask Your Excellency's permission to make just one remark on what has fallen from the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens. He said that he was not aware that colonial registration has been given up. That is quite true, but the reason is that it is absolutely essential for emigrants proceeding to a foreign country. Dhubri and the rest of Assam, including all the labour-districts with the local contracts executed therein, are under our own laws and the administration of our own officers; all that we require is that somewhere or other officers whom we can trust shall ascertain that the labourers know the nature of their engagements and enter into them voluntarily."

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR said:—"I am unwilling to say much upon a subject which has been discussed so long, and especially after the very full and closely-argued speech of my hon'ble friend Sir Philip Hutchins, in whose statement of the case I wish to express my entire concurrence; but I have been so much identified with this question of initial registration, and I may even say that the Government of India has laid so much weight on my opposition to it in their Despatch to the Secretary of State, that I do not think it would be right for me to give a silent vote on the subject.

"It seemed to me that in the speech of the Hon'ble Mover of the amendment there was a singular hiatus between the major and the minor of his premises. His argument seemed to be that there were great and serious defects in the mode of conducting emigration and in regard to the offences of kidnapping and enticement; but in order to cure these defects and stop to these offences his only proposal was to introduce this system of initial registration, which, as I have shewn to the best of my ability elsewhere, and as has been shewn to-day in the clear exposition of the matter given by Sir Philip Hutchins, will not provide the required remedy. And then, while calling this registration permissive, he proceeds, further on, to make it compulsory, by providing a penal clause the effect of which would be to the last degree disastrous to the condition of labourers throughout Assam by abolishing the possibility of their executing local contracts unless they are sent up under registration from the country of recruitment.

"The evils connected with enticement and kidnapping are grave in themselves, and were at one time very serious in Bengal; but Sir Steuart Bayley took active steps to put them down by appointing special officers and by strong administative measures, and I have lately been able to report to the Government of India that to a very large extent these evils have been put a stop to. That they ever will be entirely put a stop to no one, I think, can expect; all we can do is to give every facility to those who desire to stop them. The Government of India, in their letter to the Government of Bengal, took this view when they wrote:—

'As the letter of the Bengal Government had only suggested remedies which were judged to be inexpedient and likely to prove inefficacious, ... His Excellency in Council was compelled to throw on Sir Charles Elliott the entire burden of devising appropriate measures.'

"This was in the Despatch of May, 1892. I have not been neglectful of this burden and have since that time been largely occupied in the effort to devise the measures which Your Excellency's Government directed me to consider, and I have lately submitted to the Government of India in the Home Department a set of rules which will, if approved and carried out, effect to a very large extent the exact result which the Hon'ble Mover desires to effect. They will to a certain extent be within the law, and to a certain extent without the law. To some extent they are supported by the Bengal Act, I of 1889, and to some extent they are instructions to executive officers, and I believe that they can be satisfactorily carried out. If not, we shall take measures to provide full legislative power, but I believe that the existing legislative power is sufficient. If these rules are approved, we propose to keep a record of every person who passes through the free depôts, and so shall be able to effect the end of tracing those who leave their homes, which is the main object, I think, of my hon'ble friend's amendment. There will still remain the danger of personation, which cannot possibly be effectually dealt with by any legal or executive system of registration. But the other evils and offences can be put down by active and constant supervision and by the readiness of the persons who suffer from these offences to complain and to get their wrongs righted. Barring that one difficulty of personation, I believe we shall have effected what is necessary and sufficient to trace the free emigrants, to be able to ascertain their destination when their relatives wish to get them back, so that they can follow them up and either catch them on the road or redeem them if they choose to do so from the effects of the contract. I believe that these rules will be a real remedy, and that the amendment of which my hon'ble friend has given notice not only is not required in itself, but would be altogether ineffectual in putting down the abuses complained of."

The amendment was put and negatived.

The following amendment by the Hon'ble DR. RASHBEHARY GHOSE was then withdrawn:—

That after the new section 112A proposed to be added to the Act by section 12 of the Bill, the following section shall be inserted, the present section 112B being renumbered 112C:—

"112B. Nothing in section 111 or in section 112 shall be deemed to authorise any employer to enter into a labour-contract with any native of India who is not resident in a labour-district or who has not been registered under section 7A."

The Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM moved that section 5 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee be omitted. Also that in the new section proposed to be substituted for section 112 of the said Act by the same section of the Bill, for the words "Notwithstanding the provisions of section 111, any employer may enter into a labour-contract with any native of India in a labour-district for any term not exceeding four years commencing from the date of the execution of the contract if he appears," the words "Any employer desirous of entering into a labour-contract with any native of India in a labour-district may, instead of executing such contract under section 111, appear" be substituted. He said:—"With Your Excellency's permission I will take together these two amendments which stand in my name, as they relate practically to the same point, namely, whether the maximum term of the labourer's contract should be allowed to stand at five years, as at present, or should be reduced to four years.

"The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill has already explained to what an extent the condition of tea-estates has been enquired into of late years. The Government of India have acknowledged, in published documents, the efforts made and expenditure incurred by persons interested in the tea-industry; in promoting emigration to Assam; the benefits caused thereby both to Assam and to the provinces from which the emigrants come; the generally satisfactory condition of the tea-labourers; and the creditable manner in which the labour-system has worked with rare exceptions so far as planters are concerned.

"But in spite of these admittedly favourable results it is now proposed to reduce the period of contract to four years; to prohibit contracts for periods exceeding one year without the intervention of a public officer; to extend inspection to natives of the actual labour-district; to render more stringent, as against the employer, the provisions of the Act which enable the Government to close gardens to Act-labour; to make the employer liable for the cost of repatriating persons wrongfully recruited, even though he may personally have been in no way concerned with their recruitment; and to add to and strengthen the powers of control which the executive authorities exercise over the employer.

"But, although the present Bill is in these respects one-sided (the one or two points on which it amends the law in a direction favourable to the employer being of minor importance), I am prepared to accept it generally. I am willing to agree to any powers being taken by Government which are considered necessary, or even desirable, for the protection of labourers and emigrants. I therefore accept the main lines of the Bill, but I feel bound to take strong exception to the provisions of the Bill which reduce the period of the contract (under whatever section it is entered into) below five years. The changes on this point are likely to prove detrimental to the working of the labour-system, and, as far as I can make out, it has not been shown that there is any necessity for them or that they are likely to effect any useful practical result.

"The grounds on which the maximum contract period was raised from three to five years in 1882 are thus stated in the Report* of the Commission, which revised Act VII (B.C.) of 1873:—

'We have raised the maximum limit of time to five years, and provided for payment in accordance with the system of task work universal in the labour-districts. It has been thought essential to provide for a minimum rate of wages for a fully completed task, and for a higher minimum in the fourth and fifth years of service, to which it is proposed that the contract term may now be extended. These changes have been made in accordance with the almost unanimous demand of those interested in the tea-industry, and concurred in by both the Chief Commissioner of Assam' (Sir Steuart Bayley) 'and the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal' (Sir Ashley Eden). 'The argument in favour of the extension of the term is that it is only thus that the employer can be fairly recouped his preliminary outlay and risk in importing the labourer and maintaining him while he gets acclimatized and learns his work.'

"To develop this argument further I may explain that there are two distinct sets of reasons which make a five-year contract necessary to save the employer from loss.

"In the first place, for about the first two years or so of their residence in the labour-districts the coolies are not really useful. They are getting acclimatized and learning their work. Large expenditure has to be incurred on their health and well-being and on medical and hospital arrangements for them. It is only during the latter half of their five-year contract that they become thoroughly acclimatized and efficient as workers. I will quote an extract from paragraph 9 of the Chief Commissioner of Assam's letter of 12th August, 1892, regarding the contractors' coolies so largely imported into the Assam Valley. Mr. Ward writes—

'In their first year after arrival on the garden they do little or no work; in the second year they are capable, perhaps, of performing, on the average, half the work of an acclimatized coolie; in the third year they have settled down and do full work.'

"It follows from this that in the first year the employer recovers little or nothing of his outlay from the value of the work done by the coolie; in the second year he recovers a little, but nothing like the proportion of the outlay which the one year bears to the whole period of the contract. It is to the third and subsequent years that he must look for recouping himself the expenditure and risks incurred.

"Secondly, a short period of original contract unsettles the coolies and gives opportunities for their enticement away to other gardens. There are many employers and others who do not go to the expense of importing labourers from the recruiting districts into Assam, but are ready to draw away labourers imported by other employers (often by the offer of larger bonuses than are ordinarily given, but which they can afford to pay as they do not incur any expense in importing labour). The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao, in his minute of dissent attached to the Select Committee's Report, writes that 'if the coolies receive fair treatment, there is nothing to prevent the renewal of their contracts, and good employers have nothing to fear even if the maximum duration be reduced to two years.' It is true that with a three-years' contract good employers have not much to fear from good coolies, and we do not object if the coolies go away after performing their three-years' contract for the purpose of returning to their homes or settling down to cultivation or trade in the labour-districts; but we do object to their being enticed away the moment their original contract has expired by employers who have not gone to the expense of importing labour. If all or most of our coolies were recruited by garden-sirdars, as in the Surma Valley, I should not object to a three-year limit of contract; for though we might not in all cases recover the cost of importation during the period of the original contract there would be some reasonable guarantee that the contract would ordinarily be renewed on its expiration. Sirdari coolies ordinarily come up in families and settle down on the garden in a comparatively short time, and they are of better physique and capacity for work than contractors' coolies. But, as the Chief Commissioner, Mr. Ward, has pointed out so forcibly in paragraph 9 of his letter of August, 1892, a large proportion of the coolies recruited for the Assam Valley are, and for a considerable time to come must be, obtained through contractors. Contractors' recruits are of inferior physique, often single men and women without family ties, and not unfrequently indolent persons who could not, or would not, earn a livelihood for themselves in their own country. A three-year contract is certainly insufficient for such persons to form ties in, and to become attached to the garden, and I submit that nothing less than five years is sufficient for this.

"Moreover, I fail to see that the circumstances have changed in any respect since 1882, when a five-year contract was found to be necessary. The cost of importation and expenses of maintaining the coolie on the estate have certainly not become less; on the contrary, they have increased. The late Chief Commissioner of Assam, Mr. Quinton,* was of opinion that all the reasons which led to the extension of the period of contract in 1882 still applied with equal force. The present Chief Commissioner is strongly in favour† of maintaining the maximum of five years; and it is admitted by all authorities that the risk to the emigrant from sickness and death is chiefly confined to the first two or three years of his residence in Assam. I have only been able to find two serious arguments in favour of reducing the term of the contract.

"In the first place, it is said that it is desirable to restrict the scope of the penal contract system. I admit that this is sound in theory: no one would be more glad than employers of labourers if the conditions were such that the whole of the special labour law could be swept away. But, as I have endeavoured to show, the time has not come when the system of contracts can be restricted without injury to the employer, and therefore ultimately to the labour-system and to emigration generally. I think I am right in saying that five-year contracts are allowed in the case of emigration to the Colonies. If so, I see no reason why such should not be allowed in the case of emigration to Assam.

"Secondly, it seems to be assumed that with a shorter maximum period of contract the profits of professional suppliers and recruiters of labour will be diminished; that the number of professional recruiters will therefore become less; that consequently abuses in recruitment will also become less frequent; and that the field will be left more open for the recruiting of garden-sirdars and other non-professional recruiters sent down from Assam to bring up coolies. If there was any good reason to suppose that this would be the case, I should welcome the change: but I doubt if these results are likely to happen, and I see that the Chief Commissioner of Assam is inclined to share this doubt.‡ It is stated in Mr. Ward's letter, 'the arkati, the Chief Commissioner has been assured (and he sees no grounds for doubting the correctness of the statement made to him on this point), disposes of the coolies he has recruited at a valuation which is in no way dependent on the term for which they may be willing to contract.'

"It may be said that the cost of recruiting coolies has actually increased since 1882. This is true, and I also admit that arkatis and professional contractors are (so far as the Assam Valley Districts are concerned) gaining ground on our garden-sirdars, but I do not see that it has been shown that the fixing of the maximum period of contract at five years has had anything to do with these results. The fact is that employers everywhere (in Assam, as well as in the tea-gardens in Bengal,) require much more labour now than they did ten years ago; we in Assam require every year at least double the number of labourers that we required ten years ago.

* See page 108, Special Report on working of Act I.

‡ Mr. Ward's letter to the Government of India.

"The competition for labourers having increased to such an extent, it is not unnatural that the profits of professional recruiters should have increased also; I should like something more than mere conjecture before I can suppose that reducing the maximum term of contract to three years will effect a reform in the recruiting system. I do not myself see how it can be so. We should still have to recruit through contractors; the recruiters and arkatis would still have the same work to do as they have at present; the competition for labourers would not become less severe; and the contractors, I imagine, would be able to dispose of their recruits on the same terms as those which they now get. I can say that most employers of labour agree with me in the view that the reduction of the contract will not have the effect of lowering the cost of importation or reducing the profits of professional recruiters. That it will have this effect seems to be merely a conjecture on which I venture to think that it would be unsafe for the Legislature to act.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao in his minute of dissent appended to the Select Committee's report has set forth a new argument which I have never heard before. He says that the only argument advanced during the discussions of the Select Committee in favour of the longer period of contract assumes that in a large number of cases labourers are only too ready to unfetter themselves of their contracts by paying large and (to them) ruinous sums for their release. 'Such an assumption,' he adds, 'if true, is a sad commentary on the lot of the labourers on tea plantations,' and he suggests that the supposed frequency with which contracts are redeemed throws an unfavourable side-light on the conditions of coolie life on tea-gardens. I think I shall be able to satisfy my hon'ble friend that his remarks under this head were written under more than one misapprehension. I have already shown, on the authority of the Chief Commissioner of Assam, the fallacy of supposing that a coolie imported at a cost of (say) R90 for three years would, as the Hon'ble Member supposes, work off R30 of the initial cost in each year of his contract. In the first year he would probably work off very little, taking into consideration the expenditure which would have to be incurred on him; in the second year he certainly would not work off a third of the costs; in the third and subsequent years his work would be of the average value. Moreover, the risk arising from the deaths and desertions of a certain proportion of new immigrants (specially of contractors' coolies) has to be taken into consideration. I do not know how far it is permissible to refer here to what occurred during the discussions of the Select Committee, but, as the Hon'ble Member has done so in his minute, I will, with the permission of His Excellency the President, say a few words on the subject. I do not remember that any such argument regarding the redemption of contracts as that referred to by the Hon'ble Member was brought forward at the meetings of the Select Committee. I certainly did not bring it forward, and had I understood that any other member of the Select Committee had done so, I should at once have stated my opinion that the likelihood of a three-year contract being redeemed on the terms laid down in section 142 of the Act in no way affects the decision as to the maximum duration of the contract, and may be altogether disregarded in considering it. The grounds on which, as I understand, the Select Committee decided to recommend a maximum of four years were that section 142 of the Act fixes the value of the coolie's work to the employer at R1 a month in the first year, R3 a month in the second year, and R5 a month in each subsequent year, and that the total value of a coolie's work for three years thus ascertained, namely, R108, is not in all cases sufficient to cover the cost of importation. As a matter of fact, contracts are hardly ever redeemed. The number of contracts redeemed in each year are set forth in the return appended to the Annual Immigration Reports.* I find from Mr. Quinton's Special Report † and subsequent Annual Reports that 37 contracts were redeemed in 1886, 40 in 1887, 36 in 1888, 19 in 1889, 17 in 1890 and 6 in 1891.* During 1891 there was a daily average strength of more than 108,000 Act labourers in Assam. Of these an average strength of between 6,000 and 7,000 were under contracts for one year only,† which they could have redeemed under section 142 of the Act by paying a sum of R12 only—a sum in many cases not more than the bonus paid to a labourer for entering into a one-year contract. Moreover, there were at least another 7,000 ‡ coolies under contracts for two years, which they could have redeemed by paying R48 only. Yet only six coolies redeemed their contracts throughout the province in the whole year. I think my hon'ble friend will now admit that (so far as these figures go) the 'side-light thus thrown on the conditions of coolie life on the tea-gardens' is highly favourable. The grounds on which I oppose the reduction of the contract period below five years are, first, that there is no guarantee that the work of the coolie will in less than that time enable the employer to recover the initial expenses of importing labourers and the continuing expenses and risk of maintaining them, while they are getting acclimatized and learning their work; secondly, that, with the stamp of persons sent up to the Assam Valley gardens there will be a risk of the employer incurring serious losses owing to the three years' limit or even the four years' limit being insufficient to attach the coolies to the garden so as to ensure them against being enticed away to other estates (especially by persons who do not themselves import labour); and that any such general enticement will lead to the demoralization of labour in Assam; and, thirdly, that the reasons for proposing a reduction are not of a practical nature and assume that certain results will happen, as to which there is no certainty or reasonable basis for forming any opinion, whether they will actually happen or not.

"Redemption of Contracts—Section 24 of the Bill: Section 142 of the Act.

"If the Council accepts my proposal to retain the maximum contract period at five years, section 142 of the Act will stand as it is at present. I have, however, no objection to its being declared that no coolie shall be required to pay more than R150 for redeeming any contract, and I propose that a proviso to this effect should be added to section 142 in order to meet objections such as those raised in the minute of dissent of the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao.§

"Reduction of term of Garden-contracts to one year—Section 12 of the Bill: Section 111 of the Act.

"Much of what I have said in moving my first amendment applies also to my second, that section 111 of the Act should be allowed to stand as at present, that is to say, that employer and labourer should be permitted to enter into contracts for the maximum period allowed by the Act without the intervention of a public officer. I may say that I think that this change (prohibiting garden-contracts for more than one year) is quite as open to objection, or more so, than the reduction of the maximum term of contract to four years. I have failed to discover any reason for it, except, again, the theoretical one that it is desirable to restrict the present contract system.

"Since 1882, employers and labourers have been able to enter into local contracts for any period up to five years, whether direct on the garden or in the presence of the Inspector or Magistrate. I will not take up the time of the Council by going into arguments to show that it is necessary that the local contract system should be retained. The Government of India, in their published Despatch of October, 1891, have decided‖ that it is necessary to maintain it in the interests of the administration, and I have already said enough to show that in my opinion it is still required as a safeguard against evils arising from the systematic enticement of labour. I think I am right in saying that a similar opinion has from time to time been expressed by various Chief Commissioners of Assam, including His Honour the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, an extract from whose remarks, said to have been written in 1885, and quoted in one of the published letters of the Government of India,* I will take the liberty of reading. In my humble opinion it represents exactly the state of things now prevailing in the Assam Valley. His Honour wrote—

'As to the tea-coolie, the protection he gets, the excellent cottage he lives in, the good water-supply, the fairly cheap food, and the fairly reasonable wage he gets, are the quid pro quo granted in return for the penal clauses which compel him to carry out his part of the contract. He would not get the one without the other, and he would certainly be worse off if he had to part with both. The alternative would be a migratory class of labourers whom no one would go to much expense in hutting and providing for, because he could not be sure of retaining their labour; who would be constantly shifting from one place to another under the influence of enticement and bribery; who would have to build their own houses and would build them of poor materials on unhealthy spots; who would be entitled to no medical care when ill, and would have no opportunity of making complaints or getting grievances redressed such as they have now, when the Inspector's official visit takes place. Such a state of things would be good neither for their morale nor for their bodily welfare, but such a state of things would necessarily arise as long as population is scarce and the labourer of great value to the planter, if the law did not intervene to give permanence and solidity to the mutual relations of planter and labourer.'

"The proposal to modify the system of local contracts seems to have come from the Government of India.† It was first proposed absolutely to prohibit contracts being entered into for more than one year with time-expired emigrants who have served out their original contracts, and with local coolies, natives of Assam, and emigrants who have become domiciled in the labour-districts. We are glad to see that the proposal in this form has been dropped. It would have been in practice a most vexatious and unworkable restriction and would not have been to the interest either of employers or of the labourers who, when they renew their contracts for periods longer than one year, do so with the desire to obtain a larger initial bonus; but I submit that the present proposal to prohibit local contracts for more than on year, except when entered into in the presence of a Government officer, is also open to objection, and that no necessity has been shown to exist for it.

"On the Assam Valley side the change will chiefly affect contracts entered into with time-expired and local coolies; for very few new coolies are brought up to the garden without being already under a contract executed either at Dhubri or in the recruiting districts. Now, what is the necessity for limiting the term of a direct contract executed with time-expired and local coolies to one year? Both Mr. Quinton and Mr. Ward have distinctly expressed their opinion that such coolies are well able to look after themselves in making contracts; and this opinion seems to have been accepted by the Government of India in Sir E. Buck's letter of 5th October, 1891.‡ One or two cases may have occurred in the last few years in which contracts may have been obtained by undue pressure; but I think it will be admitted that planters have shown little sympathy with the employer at fault in such cases. Section 111 of the Act, however, which provides that the labourer must appear before the Inspector on his next visit to the garden to have his contract verified, is, I submit, a sufficient check for such cases, and we are told that the system of inspection and verification is going to be much strengthened. It has not been alleged that the results of verifications have hitherto been unsatisfactory, or have shown that these contracts are, to any extent calling for action, exacted by undue pressure.

"I believe that very few contracts are taken in Sylhet and Cachar under the Act from local and time-expired coolies; and that the majority of such contracts are entered into with new emigrants. It is obvious that, in any case in which an employer pays the expense of bringing an emigrant to the garden, he cannot be content with a one-year contract. All new coolies whom it is proposed to place under the Act will therefore have to be produced before an Inspector or Magistrate. Now I do not contend that a new emigrant is in as good a position to make his own terms in entering into a contract as time-expired and local coolies; but I would point out that Sylhet and Cachar are districts comparatively near Bengal, the circumstances of which are well known to the emigrating classes, and to which free emigrants go in large numbers. The Health Act enables the Government to watch these emigrants in the course of their journey, and the more stringent powers as to inspection, verification and repatriation, which the Bill now before us gives to the Magistrate and Inspector, will be a sufficient safeguard for allowing the practice of direct contracts, which has been carried on for these ten years, to continue.

"I submit, therefore, that the change is wholly unnecessary. I am, moreover, doubtful if it will have the desired result. The intention seems to be that employers should ordinarily content themselves with a one-year local contract. If this really happens, the use of Act contracts will certainly be restricted. But if, on the other hand, provisional contracts are taken for one year, and then the labourers (as opportunity offers) are taken before the Inspector or Magistrate and placed under contracts for longer periods, I do not see how the change will lead to the disuse of the Act. I do not say that this will happen; but it is a probable result.

"I am not sure if it has been realized how much trouble and inconvenience will be caused to the employers and labourers as well as to the officers themselves if any considerable numbers of labourers are produced before the Inspector or Magistrate for the execution of their contracts. Many gardens are at a long distance from head-quarters. Communications are difficult in Assam, especially in certain seasons, and the journey may have to be made at unhealthy times of the year. The employer will be put to additional expense in keeping up an establishment to send in with coolies, and the coolies themselves may lose their wages for two or three or more days, besides undergoing much discomfort. Moreover, the Magistrate or Inspector (there may be only one such officer at a sub-division) is, I believe, required to be on tour for not less than 120 days in the year, and the employer has no means of knowing where he may be at any particular time. The journey may have to be made two or three times before he can be found. Even when he is at head-quarters, he is engaged in other work, and there must be some delay in attesting the contracts of batches of labourers. Meanwhile the labourers will be kept hanging about the cutcherry and will be liable (especially if they are new coolies) to be tampered with by unscrupulous persons and exposed to the bribery and enticement of other employers and their crimps. The alternative of putting the labourer under a provisional contract for one year, and then taking advantage of the Inspector's visits to the garden or neighbourhood to execute contracts with them for longer periods will also cause trouble and inconvenience, and possible expense in stamp and registration fees, owing to the renewal of contracts before the former ones have expired, and the cancelment of existing contracts at irregular and uncertain intervals. I also ask Hon'ble Members to consider whether such ignorant people as coolies in this country would not become suspicious and distrustful if they were asked to renew their contracts in this manner at short notice. Again, employers in Sylhet and Cachar will not be able to follow this alternative course with new emigrants imported at their expense, as the coolie will probably consider that the one-year's provisional contract is his original contract, and demand a bonus (according to the usual practice) before consenting to a renewal.

"Another serious objection is that the change may be taken as an indication that the Government distrusts employers. I do not for a moment think myself that this is the case, and I admit that any such idea would be inconsistent with what the Government of India have said in published documents. But this may, and probably will, be the view in which the change will be regarded, especially by the coolies: and any such impression among them will certainly not promote the good relations of employers and labourers.

"For these reasons I submit that the proposed change in section 111 is open to serious objection, and that garden-contracts between employer and labourer should be permitted up to the maximum allowed by the Act."

With the permission of His Excellency the President the Hon'ble MR. STEVENS moved that in the paragraph proposed to be substituted for the penultimate paragraph of section 9 of Act I of 1882 by section 5 of the Bill, for the word "four" the word "three" be substituted, and the last thirty-six words omitted, as it was found convenient that this amendment should be considered simultaneously with the amendments proposed by Mr. Buckingham. He said:—

"With Your Excellency's permission I will move the amendments of which I have given notice. In doing so I have to represent that I am introducing no novel suggestion of my own, but am seeking to restore a provision which is universally approved in the recruiting districts, and which after very mature consideration has commended itself to Your Lordship's Government and to the Secretary of State, but which has been modified by a narrow, and (as I venture to think) somewhat hesitating, majority of the Select Committee. One reason alone has been brought forward in the report, and that is that the majority are not satisfied that a three-years' term is sufficient to recoup the employer the expenses incurred in importing the labourer and maintaining him during the period of his acclimatization in the labour-districts. But this is not a new consideration; it has been brought forward again and again; and I had hoped that it had been finally rejected.

"It is admitted that it does not apply to Sylhet and Cachar, and I think I may justly assume that it has as little application to the nearer districts of Assam. I may say by the way that to the Tarai and Duars Districts emigration is entirely free, and there are no special penal contracts whatever. Only in the more remote and less desirable and healthy tracts in the Brahmaputra Valley do the planters appear to need a longer term than three years. And I regret to find that my hon'ble friend Mr. Buckingham is not content even with the four years' term which the Bill as amended by the Select Committee would give, but takes strong exception to any reduction from the maximum term of five years allowed by the existing law, and now seeks to retain that law. I acknowledge and regret that I have no personal experience of the labour-districts; but I have served for a considerable period in the recruiting districts, and wish to be understood as bringing forward the arguments which occur to me as looking at the subject from the point of view of those districts.

"The most powerful advocacy of the views of the tea-planters is to be found in the report from the Chief Commissioner of Assam dated the 12th August last. To the arguments contained in this letter the Indian Tea Association admit their inability to make any addition. With Your Excellency's permission, I therefore propose to address myself to them. I do so with great diffidence, having regard to Mr. Ward's great experience and local knowledge, and I regret that my remarks may have the appearance of a somewhat invidious criticism; but this is scarcely avoidable since the report is put forward as containing the adopted exposition of the views of the planters of Upper Assam.

'The real point for determination' (Mr. Ward says) 'is whether any valid ground has been made for reversing a decision arrived at after full consideration before the passing of the present Act.'

"It has never, so far as I am aware, been suggested by any one that the existing law should be in any respect final. It has been generally recognised that to bind a labourer for a long period by a penal contract with strong measures of procedure for its enforcement is an evil, only justifiable on account of necessity or at least of some greater good to the labourer himself. The policy of Your Excellency's Government, which has received the approval of the Secretary of State, is to direct all amendments of Act I of 1882 to facilitating the disuse or abolition of the system of penal contracts on which that law is based. On every occasion, therefore, on which the law is before this Council for amendment, those who support the present system must expect to have to justify every material part of it. And I venture to assert that circumstances have greatly changed since 1882. Those who do not admit this, if there be any, forget that the Government is doing all it can to improve communications, for the express purpose of conveying labourers cheaply and expeditiously to Assam. And they also forget a most important and unforeseen effect of Act I of 1882 itself.

"One main object of that Act was to encourage the growth of a system of really free emigration, whether at the expense of the coolie or assisted by the employer, and to discourage the contractor system, which was believed to be one of the main causes of the delay, difficulty and expense connected with emigration to Assam. The very strong and able Commission, which was appointed by the Government of Bengal to consider the whole subject and to indicate the necessary legislation, gave utterance to the following opinions :—

'We have no doubt whatever that most of the abuses attendant upon the engagement of natives of India for emigration purposes have been attributable to the operations of professional contractors and recruiters; and we believe that the only way to put inter-provincial emigration on a sound and natural basis, and at the same time to diminish the cost of procuring labour, is to sever all connection between garden-sirdars and contractors' depôts, and to give the widest scope to the working of the sirdari system; providing at the same time, in the employer's interests, for the effective control of the sirdars when engaged on recruiting duty. The fiction that the garden-sirdar is sent back to induce only his own immediate relatives to return to the garden where he has prospered must be given up. He must be recognized as a recruiter, but as a recruiter directly commissioned by the employer himself, with personal knowledge of a labourer's life, and of whom his employer has personal knowledge. He should not be allowed to degenerate into a professional crimp, and his certificate should, therefore, run only for a limited period, and be renewable only with the consent of the Magistrate of the labour-district. We should have been glad to see the contractor and his recruiters abolished altogether. But, apart from the injury to individuals, which the summary closing of an industry would certainly inflict, it is probable that there are some gardens which are not yet in a position to employ sirdari recruiters, and must for the present depend upon professional assistance in procuring labour.'

"The Bengal Government supported the Commission's recommendations, and anticipated that the coolies sent or going to labour-districts to contract there would go chiefly to the nearer districts of the Assam Valley and Cachar and Sylhet, while the garden-sirdari system would be suitable for Upper Assam and for occasional gardens in other places. In discussing the Bill in Council more than one Member hailed the measure as likely to have the effect of leaving the emigration of coolies less and less in the hands of professional recruiters and contractors, and of bringing the employer and the employed into earlier and more immediate contact.

"After the Act was passed it was observed in a Resolution of Your Excellency's predecessor in Council that—'it is not expedient that the operation of contractors in the recruiting districts should be at once freed from all control; and it is not intended that the system of local agency (which may be paid agency) should be utilised to introduce a new class of contractors who would work on the recruiting districts outside the provisions of the law.'

"But contrary to these anticipations and intentions a new system of professional recruiting outside the Act has grown up, and has not only seriously interfered with the sirdari system which the Government and the Legislature of the day desired to foster, but has almost destroyed the old contractor-system which has been hampered by the restrictions imposed by the law. Its methods and procedure in recruiting simulate those of the legal system; but the legal safeguards and restraints are wanting, and to this source are traced most of the abuses which now exist in the recruitment of labourers. It is only just to say that the planters themselves (as reported by the late Mr. Quinton in his special report) are fully alive to the abuses which have arisen from unregulated recruiting and are willing to do all in their power to assist Government to suppress them. It is evident, therefore, that the Act requires to be reconsidered, and that this new and objectionable form of recruiting should be especially discouraged.

"The system depends entirely for its existence on one circumstance, viz., that a labourer delivered at the garden is under present conditions worth a certain sum in cash, which varies according to his nationality and healthiness. This amount is largely in excess of the actual cost of recruiting the labourer and transporting him to the garden. I have no means of ascertaining precisely how much the labourer generally receives as an inducement to emigrate, but believe that the arkati obtains at Ranchi about Rs. 40 per head. This is, therefore, the extreme limit of what can be given to the coolie. As a fact, it is unlikely that he ever obtains anything near this sum.

"I have examined a number of cases in which recruiters in Lohardugga have prosecuted under the Penal Code men whom they alleged to have taken advances and not proceeded on their journey, or to have absconded on the way. In two instances the amount advanced is said to have been Rs. 20, and in all the rest Rs. 10 or less. If from Rs. 10 to Rs. 20 be taken as the expense of the journey, we find that the actual amount received by the coolie does not exceed from Rs. 30 to Rs. 50. The garden-sirdar actually delivers his coolies for from Rs. 40 to Rs. 70. Yet the planter has to pay Rs. 100 to Rs. 120 per head to the contractor, and I was informed lately that even so much as Rs. 150 has been paid for the best procurable labourer.

"The fact that a planter is able to pay down such a sum as the price of the coolie is attributable solely to the penal contract which is made under the Act. The Chief Commissioner, in his report of August last, writes thus:—

'The assumption that arkatis charge more for five year than for three-year coolies, Mr. Ward has been informed by every planter he has met, is also incorrect. The arkati, the Chief Commissioner has been assured (and he sees no ground for doubting the correctness of the statements made to him on this point), disposes of the coolies he has recruited at a valuation which is in no way dependent on the term for which they may be willing to contract.'

"Mr. Quinton, on the contrary, says in his special report on the working of the Act that a higher fee is paid as commission for the recruitment of a coolie who contracts for five years than for one who contracts for three years, and that it is therefore to the contractor's interest to induce the recruit to agree to the maximum term. Mr. Ward's assertion must be of course accepted that, so far as his information goes, no higher price is paid in one case than in the other; but an evident reason for the fact, where it is a fact, is that the proportion of three-year contracts made at Dhubri by immigrants into Assam is so very small that it is sometimes not worth while to distinguish between the prices in particular instances, and an all-round price is arranged. But it seems to me impossible to believe that, if the three-year limit were now adopted, the price of coolies would not go down. If, instead of five years, a ten-years' limit were permitted, or (to take the extreme case) if a contract could be made for life, it is incredible that the immediate and present value of the contracting coolie, bound as he is by a strict penal law, would not be much higher than it is even now. And, if, instead of three years, the term were reduced to one, it would be out of the question that the planter should be able to give a large bonus in addition to the bare cost of a present to the labourer and the expense of transporting him to the garden. I cannot, therefore, concur with Mr. Ward in thinking this consideration of no importance. On the contrary, it appears to me to go to the root of the whole question.

"In addressing the Chief Commissioner, Your Excellency's Government brought forward the argument that it is not known how many of the desertions and how much possibly of the mortality may be due to a feeling of despair engendered in the coolie who has contracted for the longer time; this is regarded as scarcely calling for serious consideration. The argument is necessarily indefinite and the extent of its applicability unknown, but practical experience has shown that this very thing has happened elsewhere. And, until the contrary is proved in any particular case, it is a safe rule to assume that human emotions are very much the same, and that a coolie from Chota Nagpore is not exempt from the depressing influences which affect others under similar conditions.

"'The arkati coolie' (says a manager of experience quoted in the special report,) 'is a perfect stranger among strangers.' 'Absence of family life in the garden' (writes Mr. Quinton) 'follows from the system of recruitment adopted, and is one to which the Chief Commissioner attaches great importance.' Now, when such a coolie finds himself under such conditions in a remote and unhealthy spot, with his fellow labourers undergoing the process of acclimatization around him, it seems right to assume that his feelings will be those of any ordinary human being, and that the thought that he is bound under pain of imprisonment to stay and work out his full term of five years may well depress him and predispose him to sickness. However this may be, the desertions are facts, and the heavy mortality and sickness are facts, and of such we hear comparatively little in the case of the perfectly free emigrants to the Tarai and the Duars.

"It is considered by the Chief Commissioner that there is no ground or the statement that in the Brahmaputra Valley healthy gardens do not want five-year contracts. In the sense that healthy and accessible gardens as well as unhealthy and remote gardens would like to have five-year contracts, this is probably correct, but the needs of gardens of the two classes are certainly not the same, and there appears to be no reason why the nearer tracts of Assam should not be on the same footing as Sylhet and Cachar. Throughout the discussions on this subject the differences have been acknowledged.

"It comes then to this, that, if a longer term than three years is to be allowed, it is for the purpose of furnishing labour to the more distant and less healthy and desirable tracts. The Chief Commissioner thinks it right (to use his own words) to give the Brahmaputra Valley planter 'something more for the cost he incurs, the inferior article he has to put up with, and the consequent risks he runs in losing by death or desertion the coolies he has paid for, or in having his garden declared by the Government to be unfit for the particular class of coolies that he imports.' But the cost which the planter incurs is greatly enhanced by the nature of the agency which he employs, and which is in a great measure forced upon him since it has risen up under the favourable conditions of the present law. It seems eminently unfair to recover this from the coolie. And I cannot see the justice of providing that an 'inferior article' recruit for a garden in which he is scarcely fit to work should be made to reimburse the importer for his own chances of sickness or death, and even for the risk which the employer runs of having his garden closed through the mortality among the 'inferior articles' whom that employer has to put up with! Further, the sirdari coolie who has been imported at a cost of Rs. 50 is to be bound for the same period as the contractor's coolie for whom double the amount has been paid, and the strong and healthy 'first class jungly' (as I believe he is technically called) from Chota Nagpore has to make good the same amount as the feebler and more hazardous recruit from the North-West or Behar! But he is in a worse position, since the Commissioner's report shows that more of these 'inferior articles' for whose defects especially the planters must be compensated are now being recruited, and that they often decline to contract for more than three years. Consequently it is for the strong Chota Nagpore recruit to make up by his labour-contract for five years, which he is too stupid to object to, for the unhealthiness and weakness of the Behar or North-West coolie who is sharp enough to refuse to contract for more than three years.

"Under section 142 of the Act, as it stands now in force, a coolie recruited for five years who may repent of his bargain cannot obtain his release for less than Rs. 228. This is double the present cost of an ordinary contractor's coolie, and four times the cost of a sirdari coolie. If the fourth and fifth year were taken off, the amount would still be Rs. 108, or approximately the whole cost of obtaining an ordinary contractor's coolie. And this seems to me to be quite as much as even a contractor's coolie could be expected to make good; it is far more than should be paid in money or in labour by a sirdari coolie

"I cannot indeed think it equitable that, when the employer is even more anxious to obtain the labourer than the labourer to find the employer, the whole expense of bringing them together should fall on the labourer. The whole question seems to me to come to this: the planter is able to spend a certain sum for labour; it is to his interest as well as to that of the labourer that as much as possible of this should go into the hands of the person who actually works, and that a large fund should not be created out of it to be coveted and fought for by a horde of unscrupulous arkatis. If the market-value of the coolie in cash is reduced, the amount available for the cost of recruiting him must be reduced also, the competition among the recruiting agents will become less acute, and in all probability the smaller men will betake themselves to other trades. On the other hand, whatever the planter can give will go to the labourer, and will tend to improve his condition and make him more contented. I believe that the limit of three years will go far to produce these results.

"In reference to section 12 of the Bill I have merely to say that, whatever justification there may be for giving a longer limit than three years in the case of a labourer when originally imported, there appears to be none for doing so in the case of one who makes a fresh one in the labour-district. The employer has not to reimburse himself for any expense of importation, and a three-years' contract appears to be quite enough to permit of any bonus which the coolie is likely to require.

"In conclusion I need hardly disavow the slightest desire to hamper the planter in the collection and transport of labourers. On the contrary, I entirely believe in the humanity and enlightened self-interest of the great body of the planters; I fully recognize the enormous importance of the industry, and I regard it as the duty of the Legislature to facilitate in every reasonable and justifiable way the meeting of employer and labourer on free and equitable terms, and the transfer to comfort and plenty of those who obtain but a scanty and precarious livelihood in their own poor and over-populated districts."

The Hon'ble SIR GRIFFITH EVANS said that he had not intended to offer any remarks on this question, as he had not been a member of the Select Committee and had been too busy to study the details of the measure. He had listened attentively to the speech of the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens. Mr. Stevens admitted the great desirability of getting men who were living in the congested districts out of those districts to the valley of the Brahmaputra, where they would find plenty of food and good wages; but it was doubtful whether he had realised how great the boon was to the labourers in those overcrowded districts to have their passages facilitated from a land of perpetual hunger and scanty pay to a land of plenty, where hunger need never be known and where the wages were good enough to allow them to save money. Had he kept this before his eyes he would hardly have indulged in so much sentiment as to separation from family ties. Still less would he have suggested that a coolie who could easily stand expatriation for three years would be likely to sicken and die of despair at the thought that he would not see his native village for five years instead of three. This was hardly an argument to place before a practical body of men many of whom were emigrants themselves for a much longer period than five years. He should himself be inclined, after listening to the discussion which had taken place, to agree with the view that a four-years' term would probably be best. It seemed to him that a considerable step had been taken in cutting the period down from five to four years, and that it should not be further reduced.

The Hon'ble DR. RASHBEHARY GHOSE said that, with regard to the proposal that the maximum period ought to be limited to three years, he would beg to point out, in addition to the reasons given by the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens, that the provisions of section 492 of the Indian Penal Code—a section which made breaches of contract in certain cases penal—could only be brought into play when the term of the labour-contract did not exceed three years, and in reducing the period of five years to three they would bring the Inland Labour Law into line with the provisions of the Penal Code.

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS said:—"I have not much to add to what I said before with regard to the amendments to lengthen or reduce the period for which labourers may be permitted to engage. The exact period must be to some extent a matter of opinion and estimate, but, on the whole, I am still in favour of the four-years' term, as a maximum as most equitable to all parties.

Sir Griffith Evans has, I think, correctly explained what Mr. Ward meant in regard to the feeling-of-despair theory, and Mr. Stevens seems to have somewhat misapprehended him. This theory or objection originated with myself: I do not think I have found any one who regarded it as entitled to any weight, and I must confess that I now consider that the view taken by Mr. Ward and Sir Griffith Evans is sounder and more practical.

"It is of course optional with the coolie whether he will engage for the maximum term, and in this connection I may here state that I failed to mention one of the reasons which induced me to agree to Mr. Mackay's proposal to substitute four years for three in the Bill. Formerly nearly all Dhubri contracts, and very few executed elsewhere, were for five years. But during the last two years, about twenty per cent. of the Dhubri engagements have been for three years only. There is, therefore, no longer reason to doubt that the immigrants not only have, but exercise, an option.

"On the other hand, I do not altogether agree with Mr. Buckingham that the cost of a coolie is absolutely independent of the length of his engagement. Very possibly the contractor makes no enquiry of any particular man what term he is prepared to serve, but conducts his business on a rough average principle—so many will go for three years, so many for five, and so on. But, if the maximum term is reduced, the average will also fall, and I think the cost should fall too.

"It has been urged that the so-called 'price' of a coolie at Dhubri is not (so to speak) a consideration moving from the coolie himself; but I submit that the expenses of his journey, as well as reasonable agency charges, may properly be taken into account. A sirdari labourer costs very nearly as much as one supplied by a contractor, and it was recognised in 1882 that the employer should have some reasonable return for all expenses incurred by him, or on his behalf, in bringing up labourers. The system which has sprung up is a great private emigration agency, over which we maintain such control as seems essential to prevent abuses, but with which we interfere otherwise as little as possible.

"The reasons why we thought it necessary to continue to allow penal contracts by old immigrants or natives of the labour-districts have been fully stated in our Despatch of October, 1891. Briefly stated, they are—that such contracts are necessary as the quid pro quo for decent lodging, protection and general amenities on which we insist; that they are necessary to prevent enticement and desertion just when labour is most needed; that the alternative would be engagements under Act XIII of 1859, which gives the labourer no compensating advantages; that there is great difficulty in distinguishing between old and new labourers; and, lastly, that it is a manifest advantage to keep all classes of labour under one uniform law.

"There is no reason whatever to doubt that the old hands and local labourers take care to exact a bonus or other full consideration before executing a contract. A large proportion of these contracts are for one or two years only, but if they wish to settle down for longer there is no reason why we should prevent them. They will certainly not do so without a proportionately larger bonus. I should have been quite prepared to cut down these contracts by local labourers and re-engagements of old labourers to three years, if it had been possible to distinguish them. But, as I have said, they are fully competent to look after themselves, and section 112 has to cover all local contracts, including those made at Dhubri or elsewhere on first arrival. The advantages of a uniform law are so obvious that I strongly deprecate any attempt to draw distinctions.

"On the other hand, the Government of India have thought it wise to limit to one year the term for which an agreement may be made otherwise than in the presence of a responsible officer. It is not that we think that improper pressure is really exerted, except perhaps in very rare cases, but some people certainly believe that it is employed, and it cannot be denied that opportunities for using pressure do exist. Officers will assuredly take more care about contracts actually entered into before them than about mere verification. There is a widespread apprehension, however unfounded it may be, that verification is apt to degenerate into the simple issue—'did you sign, aye or no?'"

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR said:—"I confess that I saw with some regret that the Select Committee had agreed to this compromise and had raised the term from three years to four years. Writing on behalf of the Government of Bengal, I expressed my complete acquiescence in the reduction to three years. For many years I have held that view and I still think it desirable, but I recognise that the matter is one on which there is a great deal to be said on both sides, and I attach the greatest weight to the fact that the Assam Administration has opposed any reduction of the period. I do not think it desirable to press the Bengal view as represented by the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens and myself on behalf of the recruiting districts, against the view of the Assam Administration and the tea-planters, as representing the labour-districts.

"Another argument had great weight with me, and I mention it particularly because though I do not suppose I am more difficult to convince than most people, still I think that it seldom happens to us to come down to Council and have our views changed in the course of a debate. It certainly was the opinion of the Government of Bengal in 1890 that the enhancement of the contract period had decidedly increased the competition among the arkatis for coolies, and so lately as February last Mr. Grimley, the Commissioner of Chota Nagpore, wrote that—

'I entirely approve of the proposal to reduce the term of the contract from five to three years, as it will have a tendency to reduce the chance of malpractices. The longer the term of the contract, the higher the price set on his head, the keener the competition for him among arkatis, and the greater the chance of abuses.'

"This certainly was my impression, and it was borne out by what I was told when I travelled in Chota Nagpore in July and November last, and it was also shared by the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens. But from what my hon'ble friend Mr. Buckingham has said there appears to be great doubt as to whether that impression is based on any sound basis. At any rate he has put forward a "vera causa," a cause which is probably true, and is sufficient, if true, to produce the results we see, when he asserts that it was not to the increase of the period but to the increase of competition for coolies, due to the demand for a larger amount of labour, that the increase in cost is attributable. I certainly think this may account for the facts and that the argument I relied on has not the same weight which I thought it had.

"With regard to section 112, the case against the four-year period is stronger. The view of the Select Committee that the period of three years is not sufficient to recoup the employer for expenses incurred does not at all apply to the case of the local labourer whose period was to have been reduced to three and is now raised to four years, and I have even more reluctance to accede to that alteration in the original Bill than to the first one. But, on the other hand, my hon'ble friend Sir Philip Hutchins has argued that it is very desirable to make the law uniform. I have agreed, for the reasons already stated, that for the Dhubri contracts the four-year period is the right one, and unless you alter the law the result will be that you will require a different section for the Dhubri contracts and for the local residents of the district, as it would be impossible to say in the same section that in the one case there should be a maximum of four years and in the other that there should not be such a maximum. It would be a difficult matter to effect such an alteration in the draft of the Bill at the present moment, and I am therefore prepared to accept the Bill as it stands amended by the Select Committee; but I hope it will not be for very long. The time will come when the Council and Your Excellency will feel justified in reducing the period from four to three years, and by gentle steps of that kind we shall gradually reach that object, which, we all aim at, of abolishing the anomalous conditions under which labour exists in Assam and by introducing free labour and free emigration from Bengal and the North-West."

The Hon'ble SIR ALEXANDER MILLER said:—"When this point was first considered by the Select Committee there was a very distinct majority in favour of maintaining the word 'three' as it was found in the draft Bill. That, speaking for myself, was only altered to 'four' on what I understood to be a bargain on the part of the two gentlemen—the only two—of the Select Committee who were anxious to maintain the longer period, that the concession of three to four would be accepted as settling the question as far as it could be settled, and thereupon the word 'four' was put into the draft Bill by my casting vote—a vote which I would not have given had I supposed that the question would be afterwards treated as open. It appears to me that the only justification for these labourers being under a penal contract at all is that it is to their interest that they should be brought up to the labour-district, that they cannot bring themselves up there as they have not the means, and it is not worth the while of the employers to bring them there unless they have the hold over them which is given by a penal contract of this kind. The question therefore to my mind, when you come to consider the time, is, what is such a length of time as will fairly compensate the employer for his initial expense and give him such a margin of profit as will make it worth his while to bring the labourer up to Assam? Now, I confess that in the calculations which we made in the Select Committee on the subject I was more or less misled by the terms of section 142 of the Act. I am now satisfied, more especially when I have the Hon'ble Mr. Buckingham's evidence that sirdari coolies are better than contractors' coolies, and that you can get sirdari coolies up to Dhubri for not more than Rs. 75, and then taking the estimate of section 142 as a fair estimate of what a man's labour was worth, I found that three years amounts to Rs. 108, and I think that, if you give a man labour for this amount from labourers who one with another do not cost him more than Rs. 75, the margin between the two is quite sufficient to make it worth his while to run the risk of loss by death or desertion. Any extension of the period of the penal contract seems to me calculated only to increase the profits of the contractor, at the expense of both labourer and employer. Therefore, if my hon'ble friend Mr. Stevens presses his amendment to substitute the word 'three' for 'four' I shall vote for it.

"On the other question I cannot see that there is any hardship whatever to an employer if he is obliged, in case he desires that a labourer should enter into a fresh contract with him, to bring him before an officer who will see that the contract is a fair one, and that the labourer has received a fair conseration for entering into this penal confract; and I was myself anxious that a clause should be put into the Bill providing that it should be part of the duty of the Inspector to see that the labourer had received adequate consideration for entering into the renewed contract. The majority of the Select Committee, however, thought that sections 111 and 112 as altered sufficiently safeguarded his interests. I cannot see any justification for allowing a man to put himself under a contract by which he is exposed to sudden arrest and imprisonment for six months without at least giving him security of this kind.

"Then the provision in section 111 which now proposes to allow an employer to enter into a labour-contract for a term not exceeding one year is under the peculiar circumstances of the case a useful one, because it might be extremely difficult for the employer to bring all these labourers up to the central station and put them under new contracts, and therefore some opportunity must be given to the employer to keep those men with him for a reasonable time until the contracts can be renewed. He can always arrange for a visit of the Government officer within the year for the purpose of renewing these contracts, and they can then be renewed for three or four years according to the terms of the Act.

"I quite agree that under the circumstances of this Bill it is impossible to put one term for the original contract and another for the local contract. The Hon'ble Mr. Buckingham says that when a man is engaged only for a year he will of course before consenting to a renewal ask for a further bonus. So far from considering that an objection, I think it is rather an argument in favour of the proposal, because I do not think any one ought to be allowed to enter into such a contract without getting, in some form, a handsome bonus, and consequently I do not think that there would be any hardship in it."

The Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM'S amendment that section 5 of the Bill as amended by the Select Committee be omitted was then put and negatived.

The Hon'ble MR. STEVENS' amendment, that in the paragraph proposed to be substituted for the penultimate paragraph of section 9 of Act I of 1882 by section 5 of the Bill, for the word "four" the word "three" be substituted, and the last thirty-six words omitted, was then put and negatived.

The amendment of the Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM that in the new section proposed to be substituted for section 111 of Act I of 1882 by section 12 of the Bill the words "for any term not exceeding one year commencing from the date of the execution of the contract" be omitted was then put and negatived.

The following amendments, of which notice had been given by the Hon'ble MR. BUCKINGHAM, were then withdrawn:—

(1) that in the new section proposed to be substituted for section 112 of the said Act by the same section of the Bill, for the words "Notwithstanding the provisions of section 111, any employer may enter into a labour-contract with any native of India in a labour-district for any term not exceeding four years commencing from the date of the execution of the contract, if he appears," the words "Any employer desirous of entering into a labour-contract with any native of India in a labour-district may, instead of executing such contract under section 111, appear" be substituted,

(2) that for section 24 of the Bill the following be substituted, namely:—

"24. To the last paragraph of section 142 of the said Act the following shall be added, namely:—

'Provided that the amount payable by a labourer to redeem the labour-contract shall in no case exceed one hundred and fifty rupees.'"

The amendment by the Hon'ble MR. STEVENS that, in the section proposed to be substituted for section 112 of the said Act by section 12 of the Bill, for the word "four" the word "three" be substituted, was then put and negatived.

The amendment, of which notice had been given by the Hon'ble MR. STEVENS, that in section 24 of the Bill, for the words "third and fourth years" the words "third year" be substituted, was then withdrawn.

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS then moved that the Bill, as amended, be passed.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The Council adjourned to Thursday, the 30th March, 1893, His Excellency THE PRESIDENT remarking that the discussion of the Financial Statement would take place on that day.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, March 18th, 1893.

Another week of unsettled weather is shown by the Daily Weather Reports of the period under review. From Sunday until Wednesday the unsettled conditions were mainly confined to North-East India and to the east of the Peninsula, where showers of rain, thunderstorms with rain and hail, and high winds were experienced; but on Thursday the 16th the weather improved in North-East India and the Peninsula, and became disturbed in North-West India. A well marked depression crossed the Sind frontier on the morning of the 16th, and advanced into the centre of North-West India during the 17th and 18th, and showery unsettled conditions were reported from the North-West Himalayas and their neighbourhood.

On the 12th, the barometer was changing by small amounts. Readings were highest over the north and east of the Punjab, the east of Rajputana, and the west of the North-Western Provinces, while they were lowest in the south of the Bay. Pressure was generally higher than usual. The general direction of the wind was between north-east and south-east. The force was fresh in several places. Scattered showers of rain were reported from North and West Bengal, the North-West and Central Provinces, and from some stations in the North-West Himalayas, in the Peninsula and in Lower Burma. Chanda received 2·42 inches and Bahraich 1·02 inches, but elsewhere the amounts were moderate or small. The chart of the 13th showed that pressure was still changing slowly, and the general conditions had changed very little during the previous 24 hours. The winds were somewhat more variable than on the preceding day, but the general directions continued between south-east and north-east. Showers had been fairly general over Lower Bengal and Orissa, and widely scattered showers were reported from the North-Western Provinces, the Central Provinces, the Peninsula, and Lower Burma. On the 14th, the most important change was the appearance of a large shallow area of low pressure over the North-West Frontier. In other respects little change had occurred: pressure remaining highest over Eastern Rajputana, Central India and part of the Central Provinces, and lowest off the West Coast and over the south of the Peninsula. Westerly and south-westerly winds were blowing down the Gangetic plain and north-westerly winds along the north-west coasts of the Bay. Easterly winds prevailed over the Peninsula and the central parts of the country. Rain was reported from a large part of North-East India and from the east, centre and south of the Peninsula. In the east and centre of the Peninsula, a large track of country received about 2 inches of rain during rather severe thunderstorms. On the 15th the barometer was falling generally. The low pressure area over the north-west frontier was still shown there, and readings were at the same time low off the West Coast and over Lower Burma. The winds were shifting round again to east up the Gangetic plain and had turned to south on the Madras coast. Elsewhere the directions displayed much irregularity. Rain continued to fall generally over the south-east and centre of the Peninsula, and scattered showers were reported from parts of North-East India. Heavy rain was reported from Madura, and moderate rain from the Madras coast. On the 10th, pressure was still falling. The decrease had been brisk to rapid over Sind and Baluchistan, and a well defined depression lay near Jacobabad. Readings were high over Assam and over the centre of the Peninsula. Winds were cyclonic over North-West India, south-easterly over parts of the Peninsula, and variable elsewhere. The rainfall was generally light and very widely scattered, but at Cochin 3·48 inches and at Moulmein 1·11 inches had been received. By the morning of the 17th, the depression had reached North-East Rajputana, the centre being near Bikanir. In consequence while the barometer continued to fall generally throughout the Indian region, there had been a brisk recovery over Sind. Cyclonic winds continued over North-West India, south-easterly winds over the Peninsula, and variable winds elsewhere. The force was fresh to strong over a large part of North-West India. Moderate rain had fallen over the north and east of the Punjab, and light showers over Burma, Assam, and the south of the Peninsula. The chart of the 18th showed that the depression had filled up, and that pressure was generally uniform. The winds were variable. A few light scattered showers of rain were reported.

Temperature.—Conditions have been somewhat less abnormal than they have been for some weeks past, though they have continued to show large variations from the average. The mean temperature of the whole of India for the whole week has been 2°·9 lower than usual. The following table shows the variations of the mean temperature from the normal on each day of the week for the principal provinces of India :—

PROVINCE.	12th.	13th.	14th.	15th.	16th.	17th.	18th.	Mean variation of week.

MEAN FOR WHOLE INDIA .	—4·1	—3·6	—3·8	—3·6	—2·4	—2·3	—0·7	—2·9

From the above it will be seen that a gradual slight decrease in the amount of the abnormal coolness occurred during the week, the amount of variation ranging from 4°·1 on the 12th to only 0°·7 on the 18th. The provincial variations show that, in Sind and Rajputana the mean temperature of the week was a trifle above the normal, but that in all the other provinces there was a deficiency which ranged from only 0°·3 in Burma to as much as 8°·5 in the Central Provinces and Berar.

Rain.—The rainfall table, at the close of the summary, shows that rain has again been very widespread and in many parts of the country exceptionally heavy for the time of year. In Tenasserim, Arakan, the Konkan, Guzerat, Kathiawar and Rajputana (West) there was absolutely no rain during the week under review, and in the North-Western Provinces (East, Central and West), Oudh (South) Khandesh, Sind, Rajputana (East) and Central India West), the average actual rainfall of the division for the week was less than one-tenth of an inch, but in all the other rainfall divisions effective and in many cases heavy rain has fallen. The average actual rainfall was generally heaviest over the east of the Peninsula, where it varied from about 1·15 inches to 1·90 inches, but in South Central Madras and also in Assam (Surma), the actual average fall also exceeded one inch. No less than thirty-four of the rainfall divisions had an excess of rain during the week, the amount of excess being as much as 1·70 inches in Madras (South) 1·16 inches, in the East Coast (South) 1·13 inches, in the East Coast (Central and North), and 1·05 inches in Madras (South-Central). The regions which received deficient rainfall included the following divisions. Tenasserim, Arakan, East Bengal, Assam, Oudh (South) the North-Western Provinces (West and Submontane), the Punjab (South, and Hill districts), Kathiawar, Sind and Rajputana but except in Assam the variations of these divisions from the normal were small and the deficiency unimportant. In Assam (Surma) the deficiency nearly equalled 1 inch.

The three concluding columns of the table show that the total rainfall for the period February 26th to March 18th has been somewhat deficient in parts of North-West and North-East, and more or less excessive in all other parts of India. In several divisions in the south and centre, the excess has been extraordinarily large.

The following gives the largest total amounts received during the week, as reported in the rainfall telegrams of the week.—

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weekly Report on the state of the Season and Prospects of the Crops.

Madras.—For week ending 25th March.—Showers in parts of the Circars, Southern Districts, and Nilgiris, and a few scattered falls elsewhere. Improvement previously reported continues. Sowings of summer crops in Southern Districts extensive, and standing cotton there and in the Central Districts much improved, but recent rain has done some harm to cotton in the Deccan and in Circars. Cultivation on West Coast commencing, elsewhere mostly confined to land under wells and a few large irrigation works. Pasture and drinking water available, and fodder generally sufficient. Condition of cattle improving where previously poor. Prices falling generally, but fall as yet very slight.

Bombay.—For week ending 29th March.—Slight rain in parts of two districts. Standing crops damaged by rain, blight, rust, or rats in parts of five districts; otherwise good. Reaping of late crops nearly completed in four and progressing in nine districts. Preparations for next season continue in ten and cotton picking is in progress in nine districts. Prices steady. Agricultural stock good. Fodder sufficient.

Bengal.—For week ending 25th March.—The rainfall during the week has again been rather largely in excess of the normal. There was hail also in some districts. Some further injury was caused to the standing rabi crops and the mango and mahua blossoms. The rabi harvest, however, approaches completion in some districts. The collection of opium is nearly finished and weighment will shortly begin; the outturn is expected to be satisfactory. Prospects of spring rice are favourable. Indigo has suffered from a severe hailstorm in Saran, necessitating re-sowing; elsewhere indigo sowings are coming up well. Ploughing is in full swing, and in some districts autumn rice and jute are being sown. No marked change in prices of common rice. Cattle are generally reported well, and fodder aud water supplies are plentiful.

North-Western Provinces and Oudh.—For week ending 29th March.—With the exception of light showers in a few places and hail in four villages in Banda, the weather has been generally seasonable. Harvesting operations are in progress, and where damage has not been done by excessive moisture, hail or insects, prospects are very favourable and a good outturn is expected. Opium collection is going on. Prices are fairly steady.

Punjab.—For week ending 29th March.—Rain has fallen in six districts. Sowings of extra spring crops going on and ploughing for autumn crops commenced. Prospects are generally reported good. The crops are now ripening and more rain would be injurious. The standing crops in parts of three districts are reported to have been damaged by rain and hail. Condition of cattle is generally reported good. Fodder is said to be sufficient in all districts except Rawalpindi. Poppy crops flourishing. Prices high in Lahore, rising in Amritsar and Peshawar, stationary elsewhere.

Central Provinces.—Report not received.

Burma.—For week ending 25th March.—LOWER BURMA: Crops on Karen hill clearings in Tavoy damaged by rain. UPPER BURMA: Cultivation of dry weather paddy progressing everywhere, and has been completed in some places. Prospects generally good. Wheat and gram being reaped in three districts. The price of paddy has risen in two districts and decreased in three. Numbers on relief works, Meiktila, 407.

Assam.—For week ending 29th March.—Weather seasonable. Sugar-cane pressing continues. Sowing of early rice commenced. Condition of cattle normal. Fodder and water sufficient.

Berar and Hyderabad.—For week ending 29th March.—BERAR: Weather warm. Harvesting of rabi continues. Preparation of land for ensuing season in progress. Fodder and water sufficient. Cattle healthy. Prices almost stationary.

HYDERABAD: Slight rain during week, total from first January nine inches two cents. Harvesting of crops continues. Prices:—wheat 9, coarse rice 9, white juar 12¾, yellow juar 18¾, and tur 10¼ seers per current sicca rupee.

Mysore and Coorg.—For week ending 29th March.—MYSORE: Slight rain in civil and military station and in parts of Bangalore district. Standing crops in good condition. Outturn of harvest generally favourable. Prices fallen in Bangalore and risen in Hassan district slightly.

COORG.—Slight rain. Threshing of rice and ragi (Eleusine coracana) completed. Prices stationary. Fodder and water-supply for cattle fair.

Central India.—Report not received.

Rajputana.—For week ending 29th March.—Slight rain in parts of Bhurtpore and Bikaneer. Agricultural operations satisfactory. Harvesting commenced in Sirohi, Kherwara, and Ajmere. Standing crops and harvest prospects generally good. Slight damage in parts. Agricultural stock good. Pasturage or fodder sufficient. Prices steady in nine States, falling in three, rising in two, and fluctuating elsewhere.

Nepal.—For week ending 25th March—Slight rain. Weather seasonable and somewhat cloudy. Prospects of crops good.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

[Revised Advertisement.]

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage, in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets, etc. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and half of G; Volume IV, latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O; Vol. VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol. VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and, as such, will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

Abstract of the Proceedings of the Council of the Governor General of India, assembled for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

ABSTRACT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COUNCIL OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA, ASSEMBLED FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING LAWS AND REGULATIONS UNDER THE PROVISIONS OF THE ACTS OF PARLIAMENT 24 & 25 VICT., CAP. 67, AND 55 AND 56 VICT, CAP. 14.

The Council met at Government House on Thursday, the 30th March, 1893.

PRESENT:

His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor General of India, G.C.M.G., G.M.S I., G.M.I.E., presiding.
His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Sir P. P. Hutchins, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Sir D. M. Barbour, K.C.S.I.
The Hon'ble Sir A. E. Miller, KT., Q.C.
The Hon'ble Lieutenant-General H. Brackenbury, C.B., R.A.
The Hon'ble Sir C B. Pritchard, K.C.I.E., C.S.I.
The Hon'ble J. L. Mackay, C.I.E.
The Hon'ble Dr. Rashbehary Ghose.
The Hon'ble Palli Chentsal Rao Pantulu, C.I.E.
The Hon'ble Sir G. H. P. Evans, K.C.I.E.
The Hon'ble Fazulbhai Vishram.
The Hon'ble C. C. Stevens.
The Hon'ble J. Buckingham, C.I.E.
The Hon'ble A. S. Lethbridge, M.D., C.S.I.
The Hon'ble J. Woodburn, C.S.I.

QUESTION.

The Hon'ble Mr. FAZULBHAI VISHRAM asked—Whether the Government of India has received a second memorial, the first having been submitted in 1885, from the Cutchee Memon inhabitants of Bombay, who are Muhammadans and therefore desire to be governed by the Muhammadan law, praying that the draft Bill prepared by their community to abolish the application to them of the Hindu law relating to succession, inheritance, divorce and kindred matters may now be passed into law; and, if so, whether the Government of India intends to take any, and what, steps in the matter, which is one of great importance to those concerned.

The Hon'ble SIR ALEXANDER MILLER replied:—"The Government of India has not yet received the second memorial referred to in the Hon'ble Member's question, though a duplicate of that memorial had been forwarded to it by the attorneys for the Cutchee Memon community in Bombay with the intimation that the original is being sent to the Government of India through the Government of Bombay. Until the original reaches the Government of India and the views of the Local Government thereon have been ascertained, it is impossible for the Government of India to state what action, if any, it is prepared to take with a view to meeting the wishes of the memorialists.

"I may add that the Government of India is fully alive to the great importance of the subject to the members of the Memon community. In response to the first memorial referred to in the Hon'ble Member's question, a Bill on the subject was, with the concurrence of Government, actually introduced into the Legislative Council of the Governor General in 1885 by the Hon'ble Mr. Amir Ali (now Mr. Justice Amir Ali of the Calcutta High Court). This Bill was not proceeded with, because it was found that the members of the community were not unanimous in opinion as to the law which should govern them, one party advocating the application of the Muhammadan law of the Hanafi school in its entirety, and the other desiring the maintenance of the special customs which had in the past been respected by the Courts.

"Two bills were in fact submitted to the Government—one which was adopted by Mr. Amir Ali, which was purely permissive, enabling such of the Memon community as desired it to place themselves individually under Muhammadan law, and another, which was, I believe, that favoured by the majority of the Memons themselves, by which that law was legislatively declared the law of the community, and individuals were authorised to take themselves out of it by a formal declaration. When I succeeded to my present office I found that nothing had been done with reference to this question since the year 1885, and I therefore considered the matter dead, and with His Excellency's permission removed the Bill from the list of legislative business pending. On receipt of the expected communication from Bombay the matter will again be taken into consideration."

LAND ACQUISITION ACT, 1870, AMENDMENT BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN moved that the Reports of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Land Acquisition Act, 1870, be taken into consideration. He said that he had some remarks to offer on the subject, but, as he understood that his hon'ble friend Mr. Mackay wished to make some observations, he would wait for these.

The Hon'ble MR. MACKAY said:—"I beg to suggest that the consideration of the Reports of the Select Committee on the Bill to amend the Land Acquisition Act of 1870 be postponed till next cold weather. In submitting this suggestion to the consideration of Hon'ble Members I do so not because I differ from the Reports made by the Select Committee on any particular points, but because I am not aware that there is any great urgency demanding a speedy passing of the Bill, and I know that there is a certain amount of feeling that the public and those likely to be affected by the measure have not had sufficient time to give consideration to it in the present form. The Bill should, I think, be proceeded with cautiously and only after the public have had ample time to comment upon its provisions and the changes it may make in the existing law. This is the more necessary, as in taking up lands for the public good, or in the interest of the State, that interest may occasionally clash with the interest of private individuals. It is necessary that there should be a law to regulate transactions of this sort, but that law should press as lightly as possible upon those who may have to give way to public necessities. While the measure before the Council has, I am perfectly sure, received special care from the Select Committée, the public have not had sufficient opportunity of considering it in its present form. The Hon'ble Member in charge of the Bill made a statement at the meeting of the Council on the 12th of January which had the practical effect of stopping public action as regards this measure, because the Hon'ble Member mentioned that he intended to ask the Select Committee to consider an alternative draft Bill, and in these circumstances it was not considered necessary to criticise the original measure introduced by Mr. Bliss. The Report presented to the Council on the 2nd of February was a preliminary Report, and criticism of the changes it proposed was, rightly or wrongly, deferred till the final Report came out, which was not until the meeting of last Thursday; and it was some days later before the Report was published for public information. The Chamber of Commerce have written, through the Local Government, pointing out that sufficient time has not been allowed for the consideration of the proposals of the Select Committee. Members of the Chamber have addressed the Committee of the Chamber of Commerce to the same purport. Lastly, in my capacity as President of the Chamber, I have received a telegram from the Nilgiri Planters Association wanting more time. These points show, I think, that further opportunity might with advantage be given to the public to apprehend the scope and bearing of what is undoubtedly a most important piece of legislation—a measure as regards which it is desirable in an exceptional degree that the Government should know the views of the public of the three presidencies. I hope, therefore, that the Council will see their way to let the consideration of the Select Committee's Reports stand out till next Calcutta session."

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS said:—"It seems to me, my Lord, that this application for a postponement of the Bill is somewhat unreasonable. The publication of the Bill in January was an invitation to consider it and submit criticisms and objections so as to enable the Select Committee to amend it, if necessary, and re-present it in such a form that it could, unless it had been materially altered, be at once passed into law. Why anyone should have construed the publication of the Bill, or what fell at the time from the Hon'ble Member in charge of it, as an invitation to put it aside passes my comprehension. It is not alleged that there is any material difference between the Bill now on the table and that which was published in January. It is not alleged that anyone has any real substantial objection which he has not had time to bring forward. All that is said is that there may be objections; but it is equally clear that there may be none. However, I shall content myself with putting these few observations before the Council as tending to show that there is no strong ground for the adjournment asked for. The principal result of a postponement will be to continue, for another eight or ten months at least, the procedure in regard to the compulsory reference to Court and the employment of assessors, which has been, I think I may say, univers lly condemned. It is for the Council to say if this evil does or does not outweigh what has been represented by the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay in support of his plea for delay."

The Hon'ble MR. WOODBURN said:—"The Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins has said most of what I have myself to say in this matter. Any proposition that comes from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce is entitled to the respectful consideration not only of this Council but of the country at large. At the same time I find that, when the Bill introduced by Mr. Bliss last year was under discussion for eight months, the Chamber took no part whatever in that discussion and contributed no criticism on the measure. That Bill contained some very material departures from the principles of the Act of 1870. When considered by the Select Committee of this session, it was decided to revert to the lines of the Act of 1870, and in the Bill which is now before the Council that Act is maintained with the single important exception of the abolition of the system of assessors. The abolition of that system is proposed, with the unanimous approval of all the authorities in India, official and non-official, as a cumbrous and useless procedure, the expen-siveness of which presses very severely on all the parties concerned. For the rest the amendments of the existing Act which have been made by the Committee are confined to those sections which it has been proved by the experience of the last twenty-three years to be faulty and injurious The effect, therefore, of the intervention of the Chamber at this late period of the discussion is to postpone for a year the relief to the community of the abolition of the system of assessors, and the advantage of all the improvements which have been made in the working of the Act. Had the Chamber taken exception to the principles of the measure, I should have offered no objection to a further discussion ; but, in the absence of any such exception to its principles, I can only regret, in the interests of the community at large, that my hon'ble friend has thought it necessary in these circumstances to press his motion."

The Motion that the Reports of the Select Committee be taken into consideration was then put and negatived.

DISCUSSION OF THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT.

The Hon'ble DR. LETHBRIDGE said :—" My Lord, my hon'ble friend Sir David Barbour in his speech on the Budget last Thursday referred to the increase in expenditure caused by the fall in the rate of exchange, and said—

'The heavy fall in the rate of exchange has most seriously affected the position of Government servants not domiciled in India; their case cannot be put on one side much longer ; and as matters now stand no remedy is possible which does not involve further increase of expenditure.'

" With Your Excellency's kind permission the representatives of the services in Calcutta had an opportunity given them of laying before Your Lordship the extreme hardship that the fall in the gold value of the rupee was causing. Your Excellency's sympathetic reply, and the knowledge that the Government of India was not indifferent to the sufferings of its European servants, and was fully aware of the dangers likely to arise from this state of affairs, has had a reassuring effect on the services.

" Within the last few days His Excellency the Governor of Madras has received a similar deputation in that Presidency, and has echoed the kindly sentiments to which Your Lordship had given expression in Calcutta.

" I would not have troubled the Council with any remarks on this important subject if I did not feel that from the position which I have for some years occupied in Bengal, and from my present position under the Government of India, I have had exceptional opportunities for observing the extent of the distress that now prevails among the European servants of Your Excellency's Government in the more remote districts of the mufassal. It is on behalf of the officers working on small salaries in the mufassal stations, often completely isolated from their countrymen and cut off from all chance of receiving sympathetic advice and assistance, that I ask the Council's indulgence for taking up its time in again referring to this subject. As an officer ordinarily residing at the head-quarters of the Government, I have, as might be expected, been the recipient of much information on this subject. It is natural that these mufassal officers should take advantage of such an opportunity for discussing their hopes and fears and the misery of their position under the present circumstances. It has often been said, and with perfect justice, that the European officers working in immediate contact with the people are the backbone of the service. On their high moral tone and the faithful discharge of their duties, often under most trying circumstances, depends the well-being of this great Empire. I have no hesitation in saying that the strain which is felt throughout the services at the present time is felt with the greatest intensity by these European servants of Your Excellency's Government. I look upon a disheartened service as a positive danger to the country, and I conceive it to be the duty of every man, even at the risk of being accused of acting from interested motives, to lose no opportunity in enlightening public opinion where such grave issues are concerned.

" I have been told on good authority that it would take more than a crore of rupees annually to compensate the services to any appreciable extent for the losses they are now incurring by the depreciation of the rupee. If this is the case, it only shows the magnitude of the burden which the European servants of Your Excellency's Government have borne and are still called upon to bear. My Lord, if the expenditure of a crore of rupees is necessary to maintain the services in a high state of efficiency and integrity, it is my honest opinion that the country should, quite apart from considerations of justice and sentiment, and as a purely business matter, unhesitatingly pay this price and take steps to obtain the necessary funds."

The Hon'ble MR. STEVENS said:—"As my hon'ble friend Dr. Lethbridge has said, on the 31st January last an important deputation, representing a very large number of European officers employed in India in different departments of the Government service, was permitted to explain to Your Excellency the distressing and disheartenning effect of the downward progress of exchange on their financial condition. Your Excellency listened with the most careful attention to the sad story which, in various forms, was told by members of the deputation; and the gracious reply which was accorded proved to the infinite satisfaction of all that the hard conditions, under which the services had been labouring, had long been appreciated, and that Your Excellency had been no less anxious than they that some alleviation of their undeserved misfortunes should be found.

"Your Excellency informed the deputation that in June last year the Government had directed the attention of the Secretary of State to the distress caused to European officers by the fall in the sterling value of the rupee, and had pointed out that, if the present conditions continued, it would, in the opinion of the Government of India, be inevitably necessary to take steps for the purpose of mitigating the sufferings of its officers. The deputation was further told that in September last the Secretary of State was again addressed, and a strong opinion expressed that, unless a substantial rise in the gold value of the rupee should occur, it would be necessary to propose some measure of relief.

"At the same time it was said that it was not possible then to take this course. It was conceived that the enquiries proceeding in Europe might have results which would render relief unnecessary. A temporary measure would be inconvenient, because it would raise most difficult issues, and require the most delicate adjustment,—because it would be costly, and would disturb the whole of the financial arrangements of the year, and perhaps involve the imposition of additional taxation. All hopes of a solution of the currency problem by international agreement have been now dissipated; and the financial arrangements of the coming year are under consideration.

"My Lord, the servants of Government in India place the firmest reliance on the comforting words which were given them in answer to their complaints; they are certain that whatever remedy may be regarded by Your Excellency's Government as possible and reasonable will be applied to their case.

"In the Budget Statement which was communicated to the Council last Thursday by my hon'ble friend Sir David Barbour the subject was not forgotten; it was again admitted that the heavy fall in the rate of exchange has most seriously affected the position of Government servants not domiciled in India, and that their case cannot be put on one side much longer. In the Estimates themselves, however, it does not appear that any provision has been made for meeting expenditure on this ground. I am given to understand that this fact has caused serious disappointment and apprehension.

"It is impossible for any one, even while regarding his own personal interests, to overlook the gravity of the difficulties which now press upon the Finance Member, and I believe that those who have borne their troubles (to use Your Excellency's gracious words) 'with dignity and patience' in the past would not now, though those troubles are becoming more and more grievous, desire to embarrass Government by asking for a definite assurance. I shall ask for none; but I venture to hope that the absence of any provision in the Budget does not necessarily imply that the consideration of remedies for the distress which has been so amply acknowledged is abandoned even for the immediate future."

The Hon'ble MR. FAZULBHAI VISHRAM said:—"In the first place, I venture to suggest that all figures representing the Budget Estimates may be given in units instead of tens of rupees, as a good many people in going over the Financial Statement are apt to mistake the latter for the former, and hence a sum of, say, ten lakhs is taken for one lakh. If it be inconvenient to adopt the suggestion, the objection might, perhaps, be met by stating at the commencement of the Financial Statement that the Budget Estimates are given in tens of rupees, but the former course will doubtless prove to be the most intelligible one.

"The next remark I have to make is with regard to the cash balance of over 15 crores of rupees with which Government expect to open the coming year. Now, is it not possible to arrange for the investment of a considerable portion of this great sum at some rate of interest? I presume, as it stands at present, it is deposited with the various Presidency Banks in current accounts carrying no interest whatever. Supposing it remains at an average of 10 crores throughout the year, and it could be arranged to earn at least 2 per cent. interest on it, it can be made to yield 20 lakhs. Bankers and merchants can of course make more than double out of it. Even Government can obtain a result of 40 lakhs by investing that portion of the cash balance in their own paper carrying interest at 4 per cent. per annum. It would be proportionately less if the balance be smaller. I see from the Statement that Government have been able in the current year to meet the increase in the pay of the British troops partially by having invested in Government securities a larger amount of the paper currency reserve. Perhaps the same might be done with regard to, at any rate, a portion of the cash balance.

"The Hon'ble Sir David Barbour puts down the increase in the cost of army services in India (excluding pay of British troops) at R44,68,000. If this also be wholly or partly due to the fall in exchange, is it not practicable or possible to fix some rate of exchange for these services, as is the case with some services paid for in England? Otherwise, as the matter stands at present, the rupee pay of the civil services goes on decreasing in its gold value, and the sterling pay of the army goes on increasing in its silver value as the exchange falls!

"Then, with regard to the probable loan of 300 lakhs to be raised in India, the public, I think, would like to be informed of its duration, and the rate of interest it will carry. Government will doubtless consider the advisability of issuing it, if at all, at a most favourable time of the year, and at the rate of 3½ per cent. interest. This should also apply to the loan of £1,300,000 to be raised by the Secretary of State, and if both of these loans, aggregating as they do over 5 crores of rupees, are raised—as no doubt they can be with the high credit of Government—at 3½ per cent. instead of 4½, the difference per year would be 2½ lakhs.

"These are all the observations I have to offer on the Financial Statement, which is a most able as well as interesting document in every way."

The Hon'ble SIR GRIFFITH EVANS said:—"The Budget which has just been presented to us is at first sight an exceedingly gloomy one; but when one comes to look closer into it, notwithstanding the very grave apprehension there is as to the future of exchange, there are, as has been remarked by my hon'ble friend Sir David Barbour, some very hopeful features in it, notably the growth of the general revenues. As regards the question of exchange, there are gentlemen in this room better able to deal with the question than I am, and I will say no more about it except that it is to be hoped that some remedy will be found to introduce stability into our finances and to prevent their being the sport of parties in America, as at present. It is a very lamentable thing to be in this position that, owing to the uncertainty of exchange, it is impossible for the Government of India to take any steps to meet the deficit which appears in this Budget. That it is so there is no doubt; and the arguments of the Finance Member are perfectly unanswerable as regards the position which he has taken up.

"When one comes to look at these figures, there is one comforting matter about them, and that is this: The present deficit is produced, to the full extent, by inserting in the accounts what is called the Famine Insurance. The exact nature of the Famine Insurance was discussed very fully when the Budget was discussed in 1890, and I will, therefore, say nothing more about it than that it was fully explained at that time, and the conclusion arrived at by the Financial Member himself was that in point of fact this item of account was merely a special surplus; that the Government had found that owing to the liability of this country to famine, which liability was estimated at a cost of about Rx. 15,000,000 in ten years, it was desirable to budget for a special surplus every year of one million and a half, which was called the Famine Grant or Famine Insurance when they had got this, if they were not obliged to expend it on Famine Relief or some other great emergency, they would spend it upon productive railways, irrigation projects and other works of that kind, so as to accomplish these objects out of revenue, and so diminish the liability to famine. But if one has not got a special surplus of course it is not necessary to spend it, and in this particular instance it is to be observed that the total deficit estimated for in the year now closing is a little over a million. It is Rs. 10,80,000 if I remember rightly This is worked out by introducing into the Budget Rx. 1,100,000 and odd for Famine Relief and by expending upon railways out of Revenue Rx. 292,000. In the estimate for 1892-93 the same thing is to be observed. When we come to examine details we find that that sum is to be expended, or has been expended, in the year now closing, on productive railways and other works. For the year 1893-94 there is a similar sum of over Rx. 1,100,000 put down for this Famine Insurance, and the estimate is that this is to be expended on productive railways and irrigation works, that is, of course, if it is there. That is the way in which the deficit is arrived at. There is also Rx. 75,000 instead of the larger sum of Rx. 292,000, which is to be expended out of Revenue on railways on the coming year of 1893-94. Adding that Rx. 75,000 to the Famine Insurance, it comes roughly to Rx. 1,200,000. Deduct that Rx. 1,200,000 from the deficit, which is roughly for the coming year estimated Rx. 1,600,000; take that Rx. 1,200,000 from the total deficit, and the real deficit is Rx. 400,000, apart from the special surplus budgeted for.

"This seems to make the Budget very much more rosy than it appears at first sight; but when you come to look into the Statement you see that there is very good reason for budgeting for this sum, even if you are not able to spend it in productive works, because the exchange is going down. The exchange has gone down already. I am not sure how much the present drop is, but I think one may say roughly that the present fall in exchange already indicates a further liability of fifty lakhs. Therefore, although taking it at 1*s.* 2⅜*d.*, which is the rate taken in this Budget, the actual deficit, apart from the Famine Insurance and the expenditure in productive railways, would only be Rx.400,000; yet, as a matter of fact, the probable fall in exchange is likely to bring it up at least to a million unless something is done. There is also the liability, as Sir David Barbour has said, that something will have to be done in order to meet the undoubtedly great distress amongst the services owing to the fall in the rupee. If that demand should fall upon us, it is not improbable that the actual deficit which will have to be met will be as large as has been indicated, and possibly much larger.

"The relief, therefore, that at first sight seemed to me to dawn upon one at the discovery that a great portion of the deficit was caused by this head of account, this special surplus which did not exist, that feeling of relief is dissipated when one looks at these other threatening symptoms which forebode a deficit as great or greater than has been shown.

"So much for general remarks on the nature of the deficit. The next matter which I wish to touch upon is the military expenditure. No one can feel more thoroughly than I do that the maintenance of the army in an efficient state is absolutely vital, that without it no attempts at development will be of the smallest use. All development and all civilization shatters at once unless there is protection, and protection can only be secured by an adequate defence and an adequate army. But, though this is so, one cannot help feeling that the figures of the present Budget with regard to the growth of military expenditure since 1884-85 indicate a growth which, if possible, ought to be put a stop to, especially now as we seem to approach so dark a time in the history of our finances. The figures in the Budget show that there has been an increase of something like Rx. 4,000,000 since 1884-85; that, eliminating matters connected with exchange, and things of that sort, expenditure since that period has been increasing at the rate of about 46 lakhs a year. The growth since 1890-91 is shown to be about Rx. 1,000,000, and the result is that, whereas in the estimates for the Budget for 1892-93, Rx. 21,000,000 odd was estimated for, yet when it came to the revised estimate now before us, it comes up to Rx. 23,500,000, and in the Budget for the coming year 1893-94 the Budget amount is 23 millions and a little over. This is, no doubt, a little less than the revised estimate for the last year. This is, as I understand, because there were a considerable number of expeditions in the course of last year not budgeted for, and it is hoped that there will not be any next year, but whether this hope will be fulfilled must remain a matter of uncertainty. Not only is there this very heavy increase in military expenditure, but one finds that this is not the whole of the military expenditure, because one may observe that Rx. 1,100,000 is found under the head of Military Works. Also, as far as I can gather, the military railways came to about 70 lakhs for the present year, that is, somewhat less than what they have been in years past. The whole of these sums would amount to Rx. 25,000,000 or 25 crores.

"I should have observed besides that there were the special defences. As regards these it was estimated some years ago that a sum of £5,000,000 ought to be spent. I am happy to say that after the half million spent this year it appears that there will be only Rx. 490,000 to be spent in future; so we are near the end of that, and I have nothing further to say upon this question. We must assume that the money has been well spent, and that there was a necessity for these defences; we may hope that the necessity will now cease and that there will be no further requirement for expenditure under that special head. As regards the main question of military expenditure, it is generally felt that there has been a great improvement in the army within the last few years, that there has been a great deal of money well and wisely spent, and that there has been a great deal to show for it during the time Lord Roberts has been Commander-in-Chief. Notwithstanding that that is so, one cannot help a feeling of alarm that the expenditure is still rising and rising. One knows that with enthusiastic soldiers their desire to get a perfect army will, unless it is kept in check by considerations of ways and means, continually tend to require more and more money, and therefore it is necessary, when times are bad and the revenue is getting short, to desist sometimes from expenditure which, if we were able to afford it, would, perhaps, be beneficial. So, too, with regard to expeditions. We all know that situated as we are, with a great many parts of our frontier surrounded by wild and savage tribes, that expeditions must from time to time be forced upon us. But, on the other hand, it is equally to be remembered that these tribes are most of them wanting in cohesion, split up as they are by tribal jealousies, and a great deal may be done, as has been done in times past, by having strong district officers who are accustomed to deal with these wild and semi-savage tribes, who have gained a personal ascendancy over them; and that with such officers, together with the military outposts that are scattered along the frontiers, it has often been found possible to keep the peace fairly, to restrain these tribes, and to prevent such a state of things arising as to necessitate an expedition. We cannot expect that on the frontier we can have the same absolute security from violence and robbery as in other more civilized parts of the Empire. These district officers are in the position of 'Lords of the Marches,' and when our finances are, as they are now, at a very low ebb, great efforts ought to be made to instruct the Lords of the Marches, so to speak, that they are, so far as they can, to keep the peace, to keep things quiet on their frontier, and not to requisition extra troops if it can possibly be avoided. There is no doubt that with an army well equipped and ready for action there will be constantly a desire on the part of strong officers to get up expeditions and to give the frontier tribes a lesson which will last. This is all very well suppose one is able to afford such a luxury. But it is not always that the conduct of the tribes is such as to render it a necessity. I am not in a position to criticise the various expeditions which have been made. I am only giving expression to a feeling which exists among people, whose opinion is more valuable than mine, that it is possible to do something to prevent these expeditions. Although we may at any time be driven to them, it is desirabel that a strong curb should be put upon the tendency to come down upon these tribes, that that tendency should be restrained, at any rate while our finances are in their present condition. That this is a difficult task with our extensive and distant frontier is quite recognised.

"The general gist of my remarks is simply that great efforts should be made to curtail any expenditure on military account which is not absolutely necessary, and to prevent any expeditions which are not absolutely necessary. The reason why I make these remarks particularly is that I see how very much the Budget Estimates of last year were altered by expeditions, and one cannot help feeling that the same thing may happen again I observe also that the tendency we have lately exhibited to enlarge our borders and push our advance posts further up is already beginning to be a source of expense in the Budget, for I see that there is a sum of Rs. 78,000 for transport for the Gilgit Force, and it may be the case that we may find Chilas and other places figuring in the next Revised Estimate. All I wish to say is that at such a time as the present every effort should be made to prevent money from disappearing in these expeditions. Many of them, as a matter of fact, yield no permanent result at all, although it may at first sight appear that they really do. When you coerce or subdue one tribe it generally happens that you have got into the neighbourhood of another tribe worse than the first, and that there is yet another tribe at the back of that; therefore it is rather like throwing the money away except in those cases in which action has been forced upon us. I should not have made these remarks had it not been that, in view of the exceeding difficulty of the time which is before us, all efforts at economy should be made, and that this item of military expenditure, though necessarily very large, is one in which apparently it is most possible that a large saving can be effected in future. At any rate, its tendency to expand can be kept in check.

"The next point upon which I wish to touch is the Home charges. There has been no doubt a good deal of talk about the Home charges as if they were things that could be avoided; that is, of course, an entire fallacy. There is a certain amount of money which must be expended in England. So long as we purchase our stores there, there must be a large amount of expenditure on these stores; and, unless it can be shown that advantage would be derived by getting them in India, the purchase must be made there. The stores must be had, and, whether the money is spent here or there, they have to be got and paid for. Besides there are pensions. When we come to look at the large sum of the Secretary of State's drawings—£18,700,000 for the present year—one finds that there is no real abnormal difference in the Home expenditure, but that the difference is made up of casual charges, that is to say, having to repay money and purchase stores for railways, and various other things which really do not in any way indicate an increase of expenditure. There is no real difference, practically speaking, in the expenditure in England, which comes to something like 15 or 16 millions, and the rest of the £18,700,000 is only inconvenient inasmuch as that so large a drawing will tend to depress the exchange, but it does not indicate any increase of expenditure on the part of the Government.

"Out of the 15 or 16 millions spent at Home one notes certain charges which are tolerably fixed. There is about £5,600,000 for Railways, £2,600,000 for interest on debt, £4,500,000 for the Army, £1,700,000 for pensions, making altogether about £14,000,000. The rest is made up of smaller sums which are more or less irreducible. I therefore do not see any likelihood of securing any large reduction of the Home charges, but there may be many points in which we may save to a certain extent, and one or two of those I will now indicate. First of all, I would observe that there is a tendency on the part of the various departments in England to shove everything they can on India. The safeguard is supposed to be the Secretary of State. As stated recently in a debate in another place, the Secretary of State is supposed to be the guardian of the finances of India; but, so far as I have been able to see from the way things go, and if report speaks true, the Government of India have constantly to fight the Secretary of State over the finances of the country. Whether that is the case still I am not able to say; it may or may not be the case; but certainly it was so in former days, and it is said to be still going on. Unfortunately, however, the Government of India have no power to get their remonstrances attended to, and, although they may have in some cases succeeded, as far as I can gather, most of their remonstrances were pigeon-holed. Besides they are not made public unless they should chance to be called for by Parliament. It is much to be regretted that there is not some way by which, when charges are sought to be placed on India, the Indian public can be informed of them before they become irrevocable. As it is now, we do not get the accounts of the Secretary of State until they are presented to Parliament in May, and the last one, as far as I know, that is accessible is the statement of accounts which was printed by order of the House of Commons on the 13th May, 1892. This contains the accounts of 1891-92 and the estimates for 1892-93; but, if there were some means by which the Financial Member could inform the Council in the Budgets in future of any charge which had been ordered or proposed by the India Office to be placed on the finances of India, it might be that, although this Council has not the power to do anything except grumble—I mean the legislative portion of it—it might, I say, be that their representations would strengthen the hands of the Government of India in that fight which it has often, so far as I understand, in former times had to carry on in defence of the finances of this country.

"There are two things which have struck me in this account of May, 1892. I find that there is a sum of £7,000 put down for the Persian Consulate, a Mission to the Court of Persia. At first it was £10,000, and was afterwards reduced to £7,000. I understand that we do contribute to or keep up an Agency at Meshed; but, if we are called upon to contribute towards the main Mission at Teheran, it is difficult to say where one is to stop and why one should not do the same with regard to Turkey or any other Asiatic Power. The next item is with regard to Her Majesty's establishments in China, for which a sum of £15,000 is set down; this was ultimately reduced to £12,000. The note of the Auditor is that an agreement has been come to for ten years. At first I thought that Her Majesty's establishment at China really might mean nothing more than that we were contributing on account of this Chinese Mission, which is going on now and which is concerned with the Indo-Thibetan frontier dispute, and which, of course, is a very legitimate object; but, when I find that it is agreed upon for ten years from the 1st of April, 1890, one sees that it cannot be that, and what it can be or why we should pay for it I fail to understand. The £12,000 for Her Majesty's establishment at China does not seem to be a charge which ought to be borne by the revenues of India. However, I merely suggest this that the people who pay the money, if they were entitled yearly to have such expenditure placed before them and to make their remarks and criticisms upon the expenditure, ought to have these matters laid before them in time to offer their criticisms and remarks before the expenditure becomes irrevocable. Of course, the object of discussion here is that whatever we say may not only be a relief to our own feelings, but may attract some attention from the people who have to decide these matters.

"The next thing I have to observe is that the India Office expenses, when one comes to look at them, appear to be on a somewhat lavish scale. The total expenditure upon salaries, wages and allowances amount to £151,000. One sees that if you take the whole of the expenses they come to over £191,000. The total increase in the last year is put down at £3,147. When you come to look at that you find that there has been an increase of £5,000 and a decrease of £2,800, but, when you come to see where the decrease and increase are made, you find that the increase is in the permanent charges, and that the decrease was in the occasional charges. The decrease has been in the postage of despatches to and from India. In the accounts of 1891-92 there is £4,000 under this head. In the estimate for 1892-93 there is only £1,200. Whether the Secretary of State will be able to reduce either the bulk or the cost of his despatches to this extent we must wait to see. If you take that out, there has been an increase to the permanent charges of over £5,000. There is a tendency generally on the part of this establishment to increase; but, when one comes to look into the establishment itself, one is struck by a number of small things indicating very clearly that there is no strong hand there to curb or keep down expenditure. I will instance a few to the Council. I will not say anything about the salaries of the Secretary of State and the Members of the India Council. They only come to £25,000 a year and are not excessive; but after paying this we come to the Correspondence Department, which costs £32,000, and we find six Secretaries on £1,200, and six assistant Secretaries on from £800 to £1,000 a year. Then I find this item: Special Assistant and Visitor to the Indian Museum at £800 a year. I am at a loss to understand the nature of this gentleman's duties, but I find that he requires, or did require, for the performance of them a clerk at £400 a year. But that is not enough. The Visitor is apparently short of technical knowledge, and so he has a special technical assistant at £350 a year. Then we come to the general clerks in the Correspondence Department, and we find 11 senior clerks; then we find 6 redundant senior clerks. Now, I have no idea what a redundant clerk may mean, but the term certainly suggests something in the nature of a luxury. Then I find a number of junior clerks and a large number of other assistant clerks, so that there are altogether 49 persons engaged in this Correspondence Department of the India Office. Then you find that they apparently all receive personal allowances of one kind or another, in addition to what seem good salaries. Some of the allowances are very extraordinary. You find that some of these clerks receive allowances for editing the India List. One receives £70 a year; another £50 for the same thing; another a similar allowance, and who edits the India List I really cannot make out. Then I find that another official is a second class clerk of the third grade, and he is not only one of the persons who receives an allowance for editing the India List, but he also receives £50 for the preparation of a Sanitary Blue Book. Then in the Registration and Record Department there is another clerk, one also of the second grade, attached to the Record Department, who also receives £50 for editing the same India List. This peculiarity of always receiving extra remuneration for doing anything becomes more marked, I observe, as we go down the List. Then I come to another class of persons, the office-keepers and messengers, and it appears that £6,230 are spent upon this class of officials. We find that these messengers are of the first and second class, and receive the following allowances, which are instructive, besides their salaries of £100 a year: three receive £30 each for attendance on the Secretary of State. I apprehend that there would be considerable astonishment if any of the chuprassis here were to demand extra pay for attending, for instance, upon the Viceroy or upon any of the Members of Council. One would think that that was all in the day's work. Then there are a number of other similar allowances, amongst which I find that one receives £30 for despatching and posting letters, as if this could not be done without extra pay. Another receives an allowance for superintending the delivery of coals.

"But I will not weary the Council by going into any more details; but I do say that the perusal of this report seems to indicate to a certain extent that, if there were something in the nature of a Finance Commission with a view to retrenchment in these matters, the results, if not very large, would at any rate be considerable. One has a general impression, on perusing these papers, that the employés in question are very lightly worked, and that they seem to be always wanting extra pay for anything additional that they do. I observe also that the Store Department costs £40,000 a year, and whether the Store Department is worth that expenditure I am not able to form an opinion. All that I can ask for is that the money applied to these various purposes should be judiciously spent and should not be wasted.

"There is only one thing more I desire to say. In 1890, when the Budget was last discussed, I made some observations with regard to the taxation of justice, and I then suggested that there ought to be some alteration in the taxation of justice, because Bengal, upon the figures then available, paid 14 lakhs more than was required to cover the whole of the cost of justice in Bengal, and that those 14 lakhs went into the general revenues. I therefore suggested that the taxation should be reduced, or that the money should be spent upon the improvement of the administration of justice. I do not propose to repeat that suggestion now in the face of a deficit, but in going into the question on that occasion I pointed out the very grave complaints made with regard to the insufficient number of Munsiffs and the want of accommodation as regards cucherries, and so on, and suggested that although that was the part of the Provincial Government to provide, yet that the Provincial Government could not provide it without money, and that the Imperial Exchequer ought to allow them funds for these things out of the excess taxation of justice. At that time the answer of the Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins was that, as a matter of fact, considerable changes were being made and reports were coming in, that the matter was being consulted upon between the Home Department and the High Court; and that there would be a considerable amount of alteration for the better. I have reason to believe that there has been considerable alteration for the better, but at that time the matter was still in progress and the settlement of the complaints put forward by the High Court had not been finally dealt with. I believe that they have been finally dealt with since, but I am not in a position to know the result. If the Hon'ble Member or the Lieutenant-Governor could inform me of what was the end of them, I should be glad, although I do not know that I have any actual right to ask the question.

"These, My Lord, are the observations I have to make, and I wish to add that I am entirely sensible that as regards the Indian administration of the finances of India there has been throughout an earnest endeavour to administer them for the real benefit of India. My criticism is made in no hostile spirit and with no suggestion that there has been any other than an undivided endeavour to administer the revenue for the best interests of the country; it has been made with regard to various matters in which there seemed to be a possibility either of retrenchment or improvement."

The Hon'ble MR. CHENTSAL RAO said:—"I have only a very few remarks to make in connection with the Budget.

"Although in the present unsettled condition of our finances it is not proper that I should say anything which may have the appearance of suggesting a diminution, however slight, of the resources of the Government of India, still there are one or two points which on principle seem to require early consideration, and I venture to notice them now, as I may not have another opportunity of doing so, and as I hope that the Government of India may be able to give consideration to my suggestions as soon as the question of exchange is settled, which I hope it will be ere long.

"I observe that, during the last five years ending 1891-92 for which accounts are available, the Registration Department has yielded an annual average surplus of 1½ millions of rupees, which is divided equally between Imperial and Provincial. As the object of the Registration Department is not revenue, it seems to me that the appropriation of the receipts of the Department for general purposes is questionable. I do not, however, think that the registration fees need be reduced as they are sufficiently light, but more registration offices may with advantage be created, so that people may not have long distances to travel to get their documents registered. The present charges of registration officers are extensive, at any rate they are so in Madras, and the creation of more offices will be highly appreciated. The Registration Department is indeed a great check upon forgeries, and it is so popular and so much appreciated that in my humble opinion the registration of all documents relating to real property may be made compulsory; such a measure will have the additional advantage of checking the large mass of litigation arising out of questions of priority between registered and unregistered documents affecting the same real property.

"A sum of 15 millions of rupees is now annually set apart for famine relief. I do not know how this sum came to be determined upon, but I observe that, ever since the Famine Fund has been started, the cost has in no year exceeded 31 lakhs, and the average cost, including the interest charge of 34 lakhs on the Indian Midland and the Bengal-Nagpur Railway debited to the Famine Insurance Fund, is only Rs. 39,00,000 a year. I think the country has now, by the construction of protective works—railways and irrigation—been sufficiently insured against the recurrence of famine in anything like the degree of intensity of the famines on which the average annual cost was assessed at a crore and a half, and that the allotment may now therefore well be revised. It seems to me that, making every allowance for increased charges in future, a provision of 75 lakhs of rupees for Famine Insurance is enough, and the remaining 75 lakhs may be appropriated for general purposes with a corresponding remission of questionable taxes. The export-duty on rice is virtually a tax on the agriculturists, who already pay a heavy assessment on the lands which yield the produce. It is a questionable tax, and may well be abolished. The average net revenue from the duty in the last five years has been just 76 lakhs, only one lakh more than the sum which can be spared from the Famine Insurance Fund. I say it is a tax on the producers, because India is not the only country which exports rice, and it is also very unequal in its incidence, as the duty is collected on quantity instead of on value, though the prices of different qualities of rice vary very largely. It may be said that there will not be enough of money for protective works if the Famine grant is reduced to 75 lakhs, but I think that these must be undertaken from borrowed capital, as they benefit not only the present but also the future generation. Interest on the capital so spent seems to me to be the only legitimate charge upon the Famine Insurance Fund.

"I observe that the charges under Stamps, Assessed Taxes and Excise, though not very heavy in the aggregate, vary largely in the several provinces, as shown below, the figures being those taken from the Budget for 1892-93. The Police charges, which are almost entirely Provincial and on which, perhaps, I may not be at liberty to say anything here, also vary very largely. For instance, Bombay with a population of 21½ millions costs 57 lakhs, while Bengal, with 71 millions or nearly 3½ times of the Bombay population, costs only 58 lakhs. I do not allude to these variations because I know for certain that any avoidable expenditure is incurred anywhere. The variations are probably due to local peculiarities, but I thought an explanation of the causes would remove misconceptions on the subject.

"I observe that under superannuation allowances the charges in 1892-93 and 1893-94, exclusive of the cost on account of exchange, is about 24 or 21 lakhs above the average cost of the previous four years. Although this is an item under which any retrenchment is impossible, still, as it is an item which should vary within narrow limits, I shall be glad to know the cause for the increase. There is also a similar increase under Furlough Allowances, but it is not large.

"I am unable to find out what sum has been provided in the Budget for advances under the Land Improvement Loans Act, but, considering the large reduction in the cash balances at the end of 1893-94, I feel unable to suggest any increased provision under the general head 'Advances' in 1893-94; but I must say that the advances made under the Land Improvement Loans Act in the several provinces during the last five years appear to me to be too small when the needs of the country and the amount of surplus revenue obtained during the last twelve years are considered, and I hope that the Government of India may be able to see their way to increase the provision. In India there is nothing so well calculated to mitigate the effects of ordinary droughts as the excavation of wells and the use of sub-soil water. The present obstacles to the utilization of the Act are—

(1) the ignorance of the raiyats even of the existence of the Act;

(2) the dilatory procedure adopted in granting the loans;
(3) the rigidity with which repayment is enforced.

"The last is the chief obstacle. The Government of Madras have made excellent rules for the repayment of loans by very small annual instalments, and they are working well; but I submit for the consideration of the Government of India whether, in cases where the raiyats prefer it, the time for the repayment of the loan cannot altogether be left to their option, the payment of interest alone along with the assessment being made compulsory, at least in the case of money advanced for wells. Formerly, lands under wells paid as much as seven and ten rupees per acre, even where the wells were excavated at the expense of the raiyats. But now, owing to the liberal policy of Government, they pay only the assessment which the land bore before the well was excavated, i.e., one or two rupees an acre; and, if money be advanced to them at 4 per cent. to enable them to excavate wells, they would be glad to pay an addition of three or four rupees an acre more. Ordinarily in Madras a well excavated at a cost of, say, Rs. 300 can irrigate three or four acres, and its interest comes only to three or four rupees an acre. This can with perfect ease be always realized, and, when this could be done, I do not see why the time of repayment should not be left to the option of the raiyat. As regards the ignorance of the raiyats and the delay in obtaining loans, the appointment of a special officer in each province for a year or two to travel and make advances on the spot will remove the obstacle, and this measure is being tried in Mysore with much success."

The Hon'ble DR. RASHBEHARY GHOSE said:—"Every one must sympathise with the European servants of the Crown in India in their present difficulties, which it is to be hoped are only of a temporary nature. But, while fully acknowledging the magnitude of the burden which the European servants of the Government of India are called upon to bear, we cannot altogether shut our eyes to the state of our Exchequer or to the magnitude of the burden which would be imposed on the tax-payer by the suggested addition of a crore of rupees to the estimates. It must also be borne in mind that the Government is in the position of a trustee of the public money, and that it cannot in the present critical condition of the finances be fairly called upon to be generous to any class of its servants at the expense of the tax-payer, the cestui que trust, so to speak, whose interests have to be carefully watched and protected."

The Hon'ble MR. MACKAY said:—"My Lord, it is to be regretted that the first Budget Statement submitted to this Council under the rules lately introduced by Your Excellency should, by the force of unfortunate circumstances, so far as many points are concerned, be little more than a temporary document. This being so, it would serve no good end to occupy the time of Hon'ble Members by entering upon a discussion of items of projected ways and means which from the nature of things can be regarded, in a great measure, only as tentative figures.

"Apart from the question of ways and means, however, the submission of the Budget has been accorded a special and peculiar interest owing to the eloquent, comprehensive, lucid and exceedingly impressive speech with which it was introduced, and the situation explained, by the Hon'ble Sir David Barbour. It was impossible to listen to the Hon'ble Member as he addressed this Council a week ago without being more than ever convinced that the country has been fortunate indeed in having had at her financial helm, during the past five years, a man with the matured judgment, experience and caution of the Hon'ble Sir David Barbour, and I believe all Hon'ble Members must have felt—as I did when he alluded to the fact that this would be the last statement which he would lay before this Council,—that it is an unqualified misfortune that he should be leaving the country so soon, just at this critical juncture, when we are more than ever in need of his guiding hand.

"The public, as the Hon'ble Sir David Barbour said, were prepared for the two serious deficits which he announced, but I venture to think they were scarcely prepared to find that the Government would not be in a position to frame its Budget for the coming year in a manner which would meet these deficits and prevent their recurrence.

"It is a great disappointment to find that ten months have passed since the proposed change of standard was pressed upon the Government of India and upon the Secretary of State, and that the question still remains unsettled, thereby further impairing the Indian Exchequer and doing nothing to alleviate the anxiety of the public.

"I gather from the general tenor of the Budget and from the preceding Budgets produced by the Hon'ble Member that there is now in reality only one permanent and grave cause for anxiety in connection with the Indian finances, that cause being the fall in the gold value of silver. Of the four uncertain factors which have hitherto affected the finances, three may be said to have been practically eliminated. War is still doubtless a contingency which may any day become a certainty, but the effective, though costly, measures for the increase and efficiency of the army, which have been taken since 1885, have to a great extent ensured the country against a calamitous reverse, and it is certain that if war overtook us, though the strain might for a time be severe, it would be nothing more than temporary in its effects.

"Against famine we have also now been insured to such an extent, by the spread of railways and canals, that we may fairly dismiss from our minds the apprehension that we shall see anything approaching in intensity, and difficulty of relief, the famines which used to overtake the country down to the year 1878.

"The third uncertain factor, opium, has now taken what may be called a subsidiary place in the revenue sources of the Empire; the net revenue has fallen since 1881 from nearly 8½ crores to 5 crores—a decline of something like 40 per cent., and it must be recognised that the time is not far distant when the revenue will be still further reduced. Meanwhile, with the decline of the opium revenue the fluctuations are of less importance in the point of view of the Budget than they were when it formed a very much larger proportion of the total revenue of the State.

"But, while these three uncertain factors have lost very much of the importance which they once possessed, the advantage which would have resulted to the Indian finances has been more than neutralized by the fourth factor, of loss by exchange, which, small in the beginning, has gradually grown larger, until now it is, as Sir David Barbour says, a dominating factor in the finances of the country.

"It is manifestly impossible to set our house in order, impossible to produce a Budget which will reasonably approach to accuracy, as long as this disturbing element is allowed to override and swallow up every provision made for the necessities of the State.

"Sir David Barbour still holds the opinion that the best solution of the currency question would be found in an international agreement for the use of both gold and silver as full legal tender, and I think no one will be found to deny that, from an Indian point of view at any rate, this would undoubtedly be the best remedy. But it is vain and futile now to cling to the hope that such an agreement will be made for at least a generation to come, and I gather it is the opinion of Sir David Barbour that it would be unwise to further defer action for the regulation of our currency system till such time as bimetallism will solve the problem.

"The recent Conference at Brussels showed that several nations were opposed unconditionally to the restoration of silver to its ancient position of full legal tender, and that others who were inclined to the restoration of silver absolutely refused to move unless Great Britain gave the lead and went the whole way with them. Early this month the discussion and division in the House of Commons proved that Great Britain would do nothing of the kind, and we have therefore before us three facts: first, that several nations will under no circumstances join the agreement at all; second, that other nations will do so only on condition of Great Britain adhering in full to the agreement; third, that Great Britain positively declines to join in any agreement whatever which would be acceptable to the other nations. Under these circumstances we must regard the question of international agreement as altogether outside the sphere of practical politics and must make up our minds to do as all other civilized nations have done, that is, take independent action. Let us look, My Lord, at the position into which we have drifted solely owing to our silver standard. We are obliged to curtail expenditure on useful public works. We are literally starving the servants of the Government, and thereby impairing the efficiency of the administration, and we are casting about for new sources of revenue at a time when we ought rather to be engaged in discussing the repeal of unnecessary taxation. The country has now been free from any great calamity for the past twelve or thirteen years, the revenue continues to increase, and yet expenditure increases in a far greater ratio, and we are unable to make both ends meet, simply because we choose to retain as a standard of value a metal which has now been discarded as a standard by practically the whole civilised world.

"I remember a few months ago it was argued, in reply to the suggestion that India should change her standard, that Russia was a factor, and that she would benefit in her competition with Indian wheat if India changed to gold. Within the last few days, however, Russia herself has closed her mints to the free coinage of silver and has placed the rouble on a gold basis. And, speaking of wheat export, it may be within the recollection of Hon'ble Members that considerable stress was laid upon the supposed advantage which India gained through her silver standard in selling her wheat in the markets of Europe. I freely admit that at first sight the condition of things twelve months ago was calculated to give the impression that the low rate of exchange which ruled in 1891 must have had something to do with the unprecedented export of 1,500,000 tons of wheat which marked that year. In the year just ended, however, we have had lower exchange, lower freights and probably as much wheat available for export as in 1891, and our shipments have fallen off by almost one-half. The theory that low exchange stimulates exports has, I believe, now been generally abandoned, and a study of the wheat export statistics, combined with ruling rates of exchange for a number of years past, including 1892, will, I believe, have the effect of finally discrediting the mischievous theory.

"It has been urged that the proper course for India is to remain a silver country and to go on re-adjusting her fiscal system till silver finds its natural level. But, My Lord, there would seem to be no natural level for silver. In 1891 we had an outturn of 144,463,000 ounces, while in 1892, with a much lower price than that which ruled the previous year, we have had an output of 152,119,000 ounces. Those who told us a year ago that the low price then prevailing would speedily curtail production are now forced to admit, as even the Economist does, in its issue of 4th March received by yesterday's mail, that the fall in price has had the effect of stimulating production.

"The only mints in the world now open to the free coinage of silver are those of Mexico and India. As regards Mexico, the silver coined there is the product of the country, and the coining is practically the stamping of a trade-mark on pieces of silver to admit of their exportation to China and Eastern Asia. We, on the other hand, allow every producer of silver in the world to throw his production into this country, and we coin it into rupees with which we are obliged to meet our gold obligations, though the rupees are every day declining in their gold value We refuse to receive gold at our mints, and we hesitate to adopt a gold standard—a position which is as illogical as it is untenable, and I sincerely trust that it may soon be terminated.

"Sir David Barbour says that at this juncture the proper course is to await the decision of the Home authorities on the currency question before adopting measures which must necessarily be of a stringent and exceptional nature with the object of re-establishing an equilibrium between revenue and expenditure, requiring the imposition of heavy taxation or a large reduction of expenditure, or even both, and he hopes that the Indian public will acknowledge the difficulties of the present position, and will not press for a hasty decision or the inconsiderate adoption of measures which must from the very nature of the case prove to be either inadequate or unnecessary. I feel perfectly sure that the Indian public will fall in with the wishes of the Hon'ble Member, at any rate so far as not to press for the imposition of additional taxation. But I do not feel so confident that the country will be inclined to accept the decision of Lord Herschell's Committee without demur, should it be against us and should it involve us in further overwhelming imposts.

"Sir David Barbour, I observe, has confidence in the resources of the country and in the industry of its people, and, while he admits that the task of establishing, securing and maintaining the integrity of the financial position of India in the event of our continuing on a silver basis may be a heavy one, he considers it will be our plain and obvious duty to address ourselves as best we may to fulfilling the task. Now, My Lord, I have, like Sir David Barbour, great confidence in the resources of the country and in the industry of the people. I should be perfectly willing to bear my share of burdens imposed in view of real emergency and for the common weal; the emergency, however, which is staring us in the face is not a real one but is of our own creation, and the crippling of our resources and the grinding of our industry by taxation will not remove the evil. The evil will present itself again with every further decline in the rupee, and the operations of crippling and grinding will have to be repeated indefinitely. I do not think the country will calmly consent to taxation which will be applied to no useful purpose and which will be as great a loss to the people as if the money extracted from them were taken out to sea in one of my steamers and cast into the Bay of Bengal.

"It would have been interesting if Sir David Barbour could have given us some indication of the resources and industries to which the fresh taxation can be applied—taxation to yield, say, an additional ten crores of rupees. It seems to me that, if we decide to continue on a silver basis, and England decides to retain us as a dependency, before many years are over one-half of our population will be engaged in the occupation of collecting taxes for the State, while the time and intelligence of the other half will be devoted to devising means to avoid the payment. I believe I shall not be without the mark if I say that those who watch the progress of affairs in India most attentively are fast coming to the conclusion that the depreciation in the value of the Indian currency is beginning to press with serious effect upon the poorer classes of the population, and this is a phase of the question which should not be longer disregarded, but should attract the gravest attention of the Government not only in this country but in England. If, therefore, it should unfortunately happen that Lord Herschell's Committee and the Secretary of State are not inclined to permit this country to adopt the much-needed reform of her standard so as to bring herself within the pale of civilization, I trust that the Government of India will insist on being furnished with the fullest and most cogent reasons for inaction, and that they will not quietly accept the verdict, if it be against their own convictions, but that they will continue to press upon the Secretary of State the fact that this country can never hope to settle down to a period of assured internal peace and financial prosperity, nor can her resources be properly developed, until such time as she has secured a standard of value which is common to that of England."

The Hon'ble LIEUTENANT-GENERAL BRACKENBURY said:—"The Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans has called attention to our military expenditure in terms to which I for one can take no exception. The Government of India should, and does, welcome such friendly criticism of its acts, and I am the more glad that he has made those remarks in Council, because I am thus afforded an opportunity of making a few observations which, I venture to hope, may remove from his mind and from the minds of others some of the misapprehensions which now exist as to what is called the constant growth of military expenditure.

"In the first place, I would wish to say that the Government of India are not running blindly on in this matter. We have given the very closest attention to military expenditure; and for many months past our Accountant General has been engaged in the preparation of an analysis of military expenditure for the last ten years, which we are sending Home to the Secretary of State, and in regard to which we have undertaken still further investigation.

"The opinions of my hon'ble friend and others as to this great growth of military expenditure are based upon the figures contained in the Financial Statement. These, I should like to point out, are gross figures; and gross figures are apt to be somewhat misleading when taken by themselves. In many items of our military expenditure our receipts rise almost exactly in proportion to the outlay which appears in the Estimates of gross expenditure on those items. But, without going into any lengthened exposition of figures, I may state that there are more than 71 lakhs of receipts to be set against the gross expenditure shown as to be incurred in India for 1893-94 in the Financial Statement, and I think it will be more convenient if I deal with net figures in connection with what I am about to say.

"Now, I have before me a table prepared in the Financial Department, and vouched for by the signature of my hon'ble friend Sir David Barbour, which gives the net army expenditure in India for the past ten years, commencing with the year 1884-85. That year has been chosen because it was the year when the military expenditure touched its lowest figure after the Afghan War. I find that there was between that year and the following year (1885-86) a leap of more than three crores in the military expenditure. The causes which occasioned that rise in military expenditure between 1884-85 and 1885-86 are familiar to every one in this Council, and it is scarcely necessary that I should refer to them. Since that date of 1884-85 the army in India has been increased by more than 11,000 British soldiers and 19,000 Native soldiers, and measures have been taken to render the army of India fit to take the field without delay on any emergency that might arise. From 1885-86 military expenditure has been constantly higher than it was before that date. But, since that great leap took place between 1884-85 and 1885-86, I contend that there has been no constant or great rise in military expenditure in India except such as has been brought about by a falling rate in exchange, and I think I can prove this by a very simple statement.

"In 1885-86 the amount of net army expenditure brought into account in India was Rx. 14,361,000. In the year 1893-94 the Budget Estimate is Rx. 14,981,000. The difference between the net military expenditure in India between 1885-86 and 1893-94 is therefore 62 lakhs of rupees, and, of these 62 lakhs, 57½ lakhs are due to the fall in exchange, the actual increase apart from that item of exchange being 4½ lakhs of rupees.

"Exchange in 1885-86 stood at 1*s.* 7½*d.*, while this year it has been taken 1*s.* 2¾*d.* Every farthing of difference in exchange makes a difference of 3 lakhs of rupees in the military estimates for the pay of the British soldier. There have been fluctuations between 1885-86 and 1893-94, and those fluctuations, I think it may fairly be said, have been chiefly due to expeditions. It is not for me to say much upon the subject of these expeditions. They are not due to the action of the Member of Council who is at the head of the Military Department; they are due to the action of the Governor General in Council; but I would like to make this one remark. I was reading a few days ago, in the French Official Journal, a debate in the French Chamber on their own colonial policy. A member of the Opposition, attacking the policy in Tonquin, said:—

'There are two Tonquins, the Tonquin of the plains and the Tonquin of the hills; and my contention is that we should administer the Tonquin of the plains and let the Tonquin of the hills alone.'

"The answer made to him by the Minister for the Colonies was this. He said:—

'Tonquin is like one of those luscious tropical fruits of which you cannot enjoy the juice until you have broken the rind.'

"I venture to think that that simile applies forcibly to India. That rind extends from the frontier of Baluchistan to the Burmese frontiers of China and Siam.

"The Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans has acknowledged, as has the Hon'ble Mr. Mackay, the good work done in connection with improvements in the army. I think both these hon'ble gentlemen were present recently when the Commander-in Chief in his speech at the public dinner given to him in Calcutta explained and stated how much had been done in recent years for the army in India. He spoke of the reduced death-rate of the British troops, which has come down from 69 to 15 in the 1,000, owing to improved sanitary arrangements; of the reduced amount of drunkenness and of the crime resulting from it; he spoke of the improved shooting of the British army in India, and of the Indian army, saying, with perfect truth, that the army in India is now absolutely second to none in this respect; and I trust that those who criticise military expenditure will not forget that Lord Roberts, in making that speech, said clearly that it was due to the wise liberality of the Government of India that these great improvements had been made.

"There is one cause—I will not say of increase of expenditure, as of our expenditure not going lower than it is—in which I feel perfectly certain I shall have the sympathy of every one here, and that is that we have been making great efforts to render India as independent of England as possible. We are now manufacturing in India clothing and boots for the whole army of India, which were formerly made at home; we are making ammunition for the army; we have introduced the manufacture of steel for the projectiles of our heavy guns; and we hope shortly to introduce the manufacture of cordite, the new smokeless powder, for which we are at present dependent on England. I need not say that all this means money spent in India instead of in England, and that it adds to the expenditure shown in the Indian Estimates; but it will undoubtedly, in the near future, cause not only a corresponding, but a greater, decrease in the Home Estimates, because it has been distinctly shown that we can manufacture in this country, bringing the capital afforded by the State to the cheap labour of the East, much more cheaply than the same articles can be manufactured in England.

"In regard to military works, I think it is scarcely necessary for me to say more than a few words; because a fixed sum of a crore is granted every year for such works, the only addition being that when Upper Burma was taken over and a special addition was made for military works in that country; but that sum is virtually fixed, and I think I may say that it is useless to take any exception to the amount of money spent, because every year the demands upon us for Imperial and Provincial military works come to six or seven times the grant at our disposal.

"In regard to strategical railways—a subject which was also referred to by the Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans—we are now engaged in making two railways which I venture to think are of vital importance to our military position on the North-West Frontier—the Murree-Attock line, which will complete our transverse railway communications on the left bank of the Indus, and the Mushkaf-Bolan line to Quetta, which we hope and believe will place our direct communication with Quetta by rail beyond all risk of flood or other accident. When these two railways have been completed, there is not, so far as I am aware, any other strategical line that has been sanctioned by the Government of India; and therefore, unless some fortuitous circumstances occur which we cannot now contemplate, compelling us to change our policy, I do not think it likely that there will be any fresh important expenditure under the head of strategical railways.

"As regards special defences, as has been stated by the Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans, a special sum has been allocated for the purpose of fortifying India. That sum is now spent, with the exception of about half a million pounds sterling; and when it is all expended this heavy yearly charge also will, I hope and believe, practically cease. It may interest the Council if I read an extract from a despatch received from the Secretary of State to the Governor General in Council, dated the 9th instant, which was received yesterday. Lord Kimberley writes:—

'The explanation given in paragraph 4 of the Review of Military and Marine Stores Expenditure for India for 1890-91 seems sufficient to account for the increased expenditure in England during the four years 1887-88 to 1890-91. The supply of the 70,000 magazine rifles demanded has now been completed, and, when the guns for the siege train, heavy field batteries and North-West frontier defences and of machine guns for the various services have also been provided, there appears at present to be no reason why the expenditure should not return to normal.'

"I would point out that we have now nearly completed the frontier defences of India and the defences of our seaports, and have armed them with the latest and most efficient artillery. We have nearly completed the re-armament of our British infantry with magazine rifles, and of the Native army with Martini-Henry rifles, and the entire re-armament of our field artillery with the latest and best weapons; and we have done all this without borrowing, while France, Germany, Austria, Italy and every European nation has had to resort to borrowed money for these purposes, and even rich England borrowed money for her fortifications and even to build new barracks for her troops.

"I would only add this, that we are determined to exercise all possible economy in military expenditure. Steps were taken by me this year in conjunction with my hon'ble colleague the Financial Member to introduce greater order into the military financial arrangements—steps which I trust will, in the near future, result in improved economy. I can assure my hon'ble friend Sir Griffith Evans that nothing that we do not consider absolutely necessary has been included in the estimates of this year, and that a sum larger than that by which the estimates have been increased for items which the Commander-in-Chief and I would have wished to include in the estimates was put aside owing to our willingness to recognise the financial difficulties which made it undesirable to increase the estimates further; and I may assure him that in our establishments we do everything that we can to keep down expenditure to the very lowest limit, that we have no 'redundant' clerks, and that we have no officers drawing special salaries for posting letters."

The Hon'ble SIR PHILIP HUTCHINS said:—"My hon'ble friend Mr. Chentsal Rao has mentioned three points on which it seems desirable that I should offer a few words of explanation. I am glad to say that his observations on all three have been anticipated by the departments of which I have the honour to be in charge. Two concern the Home Department; the third that of Revenue and Agriculture.

"And, first, with regard to the surplus under the head of Registration. Very recently the Government of India have been in correspondence with the Secretary of State regarding an increase to the registering establishments in the Madras Presidency, and in the course of it we ourselves distinctly laid down the principle, and Her Majesty's Secretary of State assented to it, that registration had never been intended to be a source of revenue. That I understand is what my hon'ble friend contends, so that we are entirely in accord with him, though this is not a time at which we can afford to give up any income which we already possess. The only doubt which the Secretary of State raised was whether the surplus should not be devoted rather to the increase of facilities for registration or the reduction of fees than to the improvement of the establishments. As to the reduction of fees, I am glad to find that the Hon'ble Member, with his far more intimate knowledge of the real sentiments of the people, has so entirely confirmed my own view, which is that the present fees are not at all regarded as excessive. Whether further facilities are required is being considered by the Local Government. I know it is a point which they have always kept in view, and I was under the impression that they had already done as much in this way as could reasonably be expected.

"Next, my hon'ble friend drew a comparison between the cost of the police in Bombay and Bengal. This is precisely the ground on which the Government of India lately demurred to a demand made by the Bombay Government for increased expenditure on its police. I wish I had the Local Government's reply here to read to the Council, for I feel sure that it would satisfy them as it satisfied me. Speaking from recollection, I can say that there are three main reasons why the cost of the Bombay police is so high in the Presidency proper. The first is the vicinity of the Native States, which are included in its boundaries or march along its northern and eastern frontier. The second cause is the number of wild tribes, like the Bhils, which require constant and careful watching. Lastly, the ordinary rates of wages for unskilled labour and for those classes from which the rank and file of the police are drawn are greatly in excess of the rates prevailing in Bengal.

"Towards the end of his speech the Hon'ble Member asked that a special officer should travel through each province to offer and distribute advances under the Land Improvement Act. I cannot think this is necessary, though the suggestion will doubtless be considered by Local Governments. During the last year or two, the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department has constantly impressed on the district officers their duties in this respect, and commended by name those who have worked the Act with energy and success. I am confident that the people are now well aware almost everywhere that loans can be had for asking, provided security is forthcoming. That this is the case in Madras, to which the Hon'ble Member chiefly referred, is shown by the enormous sums distributed under the Act, as I recently had occasion to inform the Council, during last year's scarcity. On the same occasion I showed that the rules had been greatly simplified and that the procedure had been made as prompt and summary as is consistent with the security of the taxpayers' money of which we are merely administrators. At such a time of financial difficulty as the present I can hardly press the Financial Department for a larger allotment of funds for loans.

"I shall leave His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to deal with Sir Griffith Evans' remarks on the Bengal Civil Courts and the accommodation for them, merely remarking that the matter is one which seems more suited for discussion in the Bengal Council than in that of Your Excellency. My recollection is that the full number of justiciaries which the High Court ultimately thought to be necessary were supplied fully two years ago."

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR said :—"As my hon'ble friend Sir Philip Hutchins has just mentioned, the question of the cost and supply of subordinate civil judicial officers in Bengal is more properly a question belonging to the Provincial Budget, which will be discussed in the Bengal Council on Saturday next; but, as the Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans was good enough to give me a warning that he was going to speak upon the subject to-day, I prepared a brief statement of the figures in order to be able to present them to Your Excellency's Council. The answer of the Government of India, when the debate took place in March, 1890, was that they had not come to a final decision upon the subject, as the matter was still under consideration between the Local Government and the High Court. But in July, 1891, they passed final orders on the subject, and these orders are now in force. In 1890, when the subject was first mentioned, thirty-six temporary Munsifs and three temporary Subordinate Judges had been appointed to meet the difficulty before it was finally settled what the ultimate additional force should be. It was eventually decided that 55 extra Munsifs and four extra Subordinate Judges should be appointed in Bengal, the total additional cost for these officers and the establishments attached to them being two and three-quarter lakhs of rupees. Besides that, the Government of India obtained from the Secretary of State sanction to the proposal that two supernumerary Subordinate Judges and six supernumerary Munsifs might be appointed from time to time whenever the Local Government, on the motion of the High Court, should request that additional staff might be created to meet any temporary difficulty.

"With regard to the results which have been achieved, I believe from what I have heard, and especially from the annual report sent in by the High Court, that this addition to the strength of the subordinate judiciary has met sufficiently the demands of the country. I notice that in 1889 these Courts disposed of 461,000 cases, and in 1891 they disposed of 485,000, so that we are pretty closely keeping on a level with the growth of institutions; and I believe it may be said that there are at present no demands in any quarter for an addition to the strength of the judicial staff, and no complaint that the persons who are concerned in litigation have not sufficient opportunities of getting their cases punctually and satisfactorily disposed of.

"The question of the accommodation of these Munsifs is one in which I have taken special interest, for I satisfied myself, when I came to make enquiry into the state of things, especially in Eastern Bengal, that many officers, and especially Munsifs, though not Munsifs alone, were housed in a manner which was not at all in conformity with the dignity of the Judicial Bench, and hardly sufficiently well for their own health and comfort. In 1891-92 a lakh and ninety-one thousand rupees were spent on the provision of additional accommodation for Munsifs, and in 1892-93 a lakh and a quarter of rupees have been set aside for this purpose. Although these sums may seem small in comparison with the figures involved in the expenditure of the Military Department, regarding whose moderation and self-restraint we have heard so much to-day, I can assure you that it is with great difficulty that they have been provided for from the finances of Bengal. We have only about ten lakhs which we can devote to original works, and out of this we have to provide for Revenue and Criminal Courts, as well as Civil Courts, for jails, schools, police buildings, hospitals and a few other smaller departments; and the amount spent on judicial buildings exceeds the amount spent on any other department in the province.

"I should like to take this opportunity of saying a very few words on the subject of registration. The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao has asserted—and the Hon'ble Sir Philip Hutchins has agreed—that it is a standing axiom that registration should not give any net revenue to the Imperial finances. I venture to think that that is an axiom which the Government of India should hesitate to accept. I grant that the fees should not be fixed too high, and that the first charge on the income should be a provision for extending registration establishments and offices wherever they are wanted. But, so long as these two postulates are satisfied, why should there not be a surplus of revenue over expenditure in this as in any other business? The dogma is one which at the present time requires serious consideration, and I will ask the Government of India to think carefully whether it should pledge itself to a principle like this at a time when, as Sir David Barbour has said, it may be absolutely necessary to impose fresh taxation to meet the financial exigencies of the country. In the year 1878 or 1879, I think, the Hon'ble Mr. Bazett Colvin was appointed by Sir John Strachey, when Finance Minister, to draw up a series of notes on all possible sources of taxation not yet developed in India. He treated a great number of those put forward as nostrums in newspapers and by other persons, and rejected most of them as impracticable; but he showed that it was possible to raise a very considerable revenue from the registration of landed property in India. I dare say Hon'ble Members are aware of the amount of revenue that taxation has produced from this source in France. The constant morcellement of landed property which goes on there is protected by a very careful and complete system of registration, and for this protection a high price is paid. I have not looked into the figures lately, but I believe the French finances receive as much as seven or eight millions sterling a year from the registration of landed property. And I have for many years looked upon this as really the sheet anchor of Indian finance, if it is absolutely necessary in the future to impose fresh taxation. I therefore think it important at the present juncture to put in a word of warning and to request the Government of India not to use any general words of condemnation about a source of revenue which they may find it necessary to have to resort to before very long."

The Hon'ble SIR DAVID BARBOUR said:—"I have to thank the Members of this Council for the very moderate tone they have adopted in criticising the Financial Statement of 1893-94.

"I am only too conscious that the Statement is open to attack on many points, and I fully recognise that the moderate, I might say indulgent, tone which has been adopted in the discussion is due to the fact that the difficulties under which the Government of India now labours are fully recognised, and that the Council desire, as much as possible, to avoid adding to the embarrassment of the Government.

"While thanking the Hon'ble Members of Council, on my own behalf, for the friendly spirit they have exhibited, I take the liberty of adding that in my opinion the moderation they have shown on the first discussion of the Financial Statement under the new Act is of good omen for the future, and I can assure them that, so far as I am concerned—and in this matter I believe I can speak for the whole Government—their criticisms and suggestions will not carry the less weight because they have been put forward in temperate language and with a due regard to the difficulties of the present position.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Fazulbhai Vishram has suggested that a portion of the cash balance of the Government of India should be invested so as to earn some interest.

"This course could no doubt be followed with advantage if we had in India a great money market such as exists in London. As matters stand in this country, I am afraid any attempt to invest a portion of the cash balance would do more harm than good. In the first place, our cash balance is not concentrated at the Presidency-towns. It is scattered all over the country, in the various district and local treasuries, and we must always have a large amount of cash actually available. This amount I would not place at less than ten crores of rupees.

"Of the balance a certain proportion is lodged in the Presidency Banks. The Banks do not pay interest on the money so lodged, but the use of these balances is one of the considerations for which they undertake to do the Government business, and in this way the Government receives the value of its money.

"Another portion is kept in the Reserve Treasuries of the Government of India, and is employed to meet sudden emergencies. In Bombay, public opinion has generally favoured the loan of this money for short periods and at a low rate of interest, but in Calcutta a different view has prevailed.

"After full consideration the Government of India have decided that it would not be to the public interest to accustom the Indian money market to rely in ordinary times on advances from the Reserve Treasuries. Such advances might not be of great relative importance in the London money market, but they would be of greater importance in India; they would be liable to be recalled at any moment, and, if such recall took place when from other causes money was dear (as it sometimes is in India), very serious consequences might be produced. It has been decided, and I believe rightly decided, that the public interests will be best served if the surplus cash balance is kept as a reserve to meet any special difficulties that may arise. When stringency arises in the open market the Presidency Banks can often obtain advances from the Government, and they sometimes avail themselves of such advances. If gold is scarce in London, a slight raising of the rate of discount very soon brings in gold from other countries; but the case is very different in India. It takes a great rise in the rate of discount to attract capital temporarily to India. The money market has been easy in India for some years, but periods of very great stringency have arisen in the past and will no doubt be experienced in the future. The Government balances are really the only special reserve we have got. They can be readily made available in time of need either by buying the Secretary of State's bills, or by being temporarily lent to the Presidency Banks.

"It is quite true, as the Hon'ble Mr. Fazulbhai Vishram remarks, that with the fall in exchange the rupee pay of the Civil Services decreases in gold value, and the sterling pay of the British troops goes on increasing in silver value!

"This is just one of those anomalies of which we hope to get rid by a settlement of the currency question.

"I am sorry that I cannot give any further information at present as to the terms on which the loan of 300 lakhs will be raised. The terms of the loan must be settled with reference to the state of the money market at the time it is raised, and it would not, under any circumstances, be prudent to attempt to settle them some months in advance. The currency question has so unsettled financial matters in the present year that special caution is necessary.

"The Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans made some remarks on the general financial position. He alluded to the large deficit in the estimates, and he pointed out that, if we absorbed the Famine Grant and withdrew the amount devoted to the construction of Railways and charged against Revenue under 37, the deficit would be largely reduced.

"He also pointed out, and very fairly, that the rate of exchange taken in the estimates was considerably above the market rate of the day, and that the estimates contained no provision for compensation to officers on account of the fall in the gold value of the rupee. Taking everything into consideration, he came, as I understand him, to the conclusion that the Financial Statement did convey a correct picture of the present situation. That is a conclusion which I cannot be expected to controvert, and I need only explain that the sum of Rx. 75,100, which is to be expended on the construction of railways, and which he thought might be taken in reduction of the deficit, is Provincial and not Imperial expenditure, and that to strike it out of the estimates would not affect the deficit on the Imperial account.

"My hon'ble friend also made some remarks as regards the Home charges. Now, these charges may be looked at from two points of view. We may consider the total disbursements in England on account of India, or we may confine ourselves to that portion of the Home disbursements which goes to meet the cost of the India Office.

"I may mention in the first place that I have always been, and am now, strongly opposed to any increase in the disbursements in England on account of the Government of India. I think there are great objections to any such increase both from a political and from an economic point of view. But it is not so easy to keep down these charges as might at first sight appear. Everybody is prepared to agree that they should be kept down, but such agreement is what I may call an agreement in the abstract. When we come to concrete cases I do not find the same unanimity. For example, nothing is more beneficial to India than the construction of railways, and, sooner or later, great authorities urge that more rapid progress should be made in their construction. It is found that more money cannot be raised in India, and about this time the persuasive voice of the promoter is heard in the land, and simultaneously, and by what appears to be a sort of pre-ordained harmony, Chambers of Commerce both in India and in England take up the question. It is said that if the Government of India will only give a guarantee, quite a trifling guarantee and one which will really impose no burden on the finances and which is merely put forward to remove the doubts of Lombard Street, money will flow into India for the construction of railways and untold benefits will be conferred on the population. It is very difficult to resist a cry of this sort, raised in a very telling manner by a host of ingenious promoters, and supported by eminent authorities. At the same time, if we give way to it, the Home charges must be increased.

"Having said so much on the general question of the inexpediency of increasing the Home charges, I wish to add a few words which may help to remove some misapprehensions regarding them.

"It will be seen from paragraph 93 of the Financial Statement that the net Home outgoings for the coming year are estimated at £22,052,500. This is no doubt a gigantic sum of money, but £1,249,200 of the amount merely represents the paying off of certain railway debentures, and for this purpose a loan of £1,300,000 will be raised. In other words, the transaction is simply a conversion of debt from one form into another form. A further sum of £2,609,200 represents the repayments to Railway Companies of money received from these Companies in former years. If we act as, what I may call, Bankers for these Railway Companies, we must expect to have to repay to them the money which on a previous date we received from them. Sometimes we receive more in a year than we pay away, and sometimes we pay away more than we receive.

"In 1893-94, we expect to pay away £2,609,200, and we only receive £1,420,040.

"There is also a disbursement of £1,383,200 on account of remittances. This represents money which the Government of India receive in India and pay away in England. Some of this money is received from Railway Companies and is sent Home for the purchase of stores; some of it represents money received from Government servants in India and paid out to their families in England; some of it is money received from Native States or Local Governments for the purchase of stores, and so on. In short, these remittances are not, quâ remittances, a charge against the revenues of India.

"There is also a sum of £1,160,600 on account of capital expenditure. This is money paid for the purchase of stores, and a direct commercial equivalent is received for the expenditure. I know no means whereby locomotive engines or steel rails can be procured for nothing, or without paying for them.

"There remains the net expenditure of £15,650,300 to be accounted for. Now, of this sum, no less than £5,747,200 is on account of the Railway Revenue Account, and it is money well laid out, and it brings in an ample return, including direct and indirect advantages.

"There is also a payment of £2,419,400 on account of interest on, and management of, debt. The rate of interest payable is 3½ or 3 per cent., and I know of no market other than that of London where money could have been raised so cheaply.

"There is also a payment of £1,404,900 for the purchase of stores for use in India. As I said before, I do not know any way of getting stores except by paying for them. The balance includes payments for Postal and Telegraph communication with England, payments to the Admiralty for services rendered, and payments of political pensions to persons of Indian descent.

"I will not pursue the subject further. I am anxious to see the Home charges kept as low as possible, but I have said enough to show that they are not that gigantic, unjust and crushing burden on India which they are sometimes alleged, and I dare say believed, to be.

"I come now to the remarks which the Hon'ble Sir Griffith Evans made regarding the cost of the India Office.

"I may explain that the establishment of the India Office is not under the control of the Government of India, but under that of the Secretary of State for India in Council. The estimates and accounts of the India Office are laid before Parliament every year, and it should, I think, be presumed that due regard is paid to economy unless the contrary can be proved. My hon'ble friend's criticisms were put in an amusing form, but I think that in the absence of any real knowledge of the facts it would be wrong to take them for more than they are worth, lest in so doing we should do injustice to a large body of public servants who have no means of defending themselves in this place, and regarding the exact nature and extent of whose duties our information is necessarily very defective.

"As regards the Persian and Chinese Missions I may point out that these Missions perform certain services on the account of the Indian Government. We have important relations with China in regard to opium and other matters; the China Mission does a certain amount of work for us in connection with these matters, and the payment is supposed to be for that work. I am happy to say that in the case of these Missions there has been quite recently some reduction of the total charge.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao has called attention to the surplus of about 15 lakhs of rupees, which is realised from the Registration Department, and, as that is a Department which is not maintained for the sake of the revenue which it produces, he has urged, with, as it seems to me, some reason, that the surplus should be devoted to the increase of the facilities for registration.

"I may explain that the Registration Department is managed by the Local Governments concerned, and any increase of expenditure which they might consider necessary in order to facilitate registration would not ordinarily be objected to by the Finance Department. It can hardly be expected that at the present conjuncture I should urge them to increase expenditure on any object, however desirable in itself, but I am sure they will be prepared to take into consideration the suggestion which has now been made, and for my part I shall be prepared to leave the matter in their hands and to accept the decision at which they may arrive. I may mention, however, that the surplus of the Registration Department is not so large as the Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao supposes, because the figures he has used do not include the charge for buildings and for pensions, or for some other items of no great importance. The Hon'ble Sir Charles Elliott has alluded to the possibility of our some day raising a large amount of revenue from a tax on registration. Far be it from me to set aside summarily any suggestion for increasing the revenues, but I may say that, so far as my information goes, I am not sanguine that we could raise as much money from this source as the French Government appears to raise in France.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao has also called attention to the Famine Grant. The amount of this Grant was determined in the following manner: It was calculated that the loss, from falling off in revenue and actual expenditure on relief, due to scarcity and famine would amount to 15 crores of rupees in every period of ten years, and it was held that a provision of 1½ crores yearly would be sufficient as an insurance against such loss.

"I am disposed to agree with the Hon'ble Member that the provision made was unnecessarily high, if we look only to the possible loss from drought, scarcity and famine.

"On the other hand, this Famine Fund is really our only Reserve readily available to meet any of those vicissitudes to which the Indian finances are unfortunately liable, and I think this point should be borne in mind if it should be decided hereafter to take into consideration the question of reducing the amount of the Grant.

"In point of fact the Famine Grant, looked at simply as a reserve for the purpose of meeting the financial effects of famine, does not at present amount to so much as 1½ crores of rupees.

"In the coming year Rx. 340,200 from this Grant is set aside to meet the loss on the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways; Rx. 65,000 is devoted to the construction of Protective Canals; Rx. 1,054,300 is devoted to the construction of Protective Railways, and only Rx. 40,500 is devoted to actual relief of famine.

"The whole Grant is devoted to purposes connected with famine, but only a very trifling proportion of it is set aside for the direct relief of persons who may be in distress owing to scarcity or famine.

"I should be very glad indeed to see the export-duty on rice repealed, but in the present state of the finances I could not recommend that any portion of the Famine Grant should be devoted to this purpose. We are passing through a grave crisis and should husband our resources to the utmost.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao has alluded to the variation in the amount of charges under certain heads in different Provinces. It can hardly be expected that I should enter in detail into an explanation of all these variations.

"Speaking generally, the explanation is that in dealing with India as a whole we are dealing with a Continent, and not with a single country.

"The circumstances of the different Provinces vary very widely.

"For example, the percentage on receipts of the cost of collection of Assessed Taxes varies from Province to Province, because some Provinces possess revenue officials who assess and collect the Income-tax in addition to performing their other duties, and whose salaries are not charged as a portion of the cost of collecting these taxes.

"In such Provinces as Bengal, on the other hand, where, from the nature of the Land Revenue system, local establishments are small in number, a special agency has to be employed for the purpose, and the whole cost of such agency is charged against the tax.

"The Excise systems, too, vary very much from Province to Province, and so do the habits of the people in respect of the consumption of excisable articles. It is impossible to draw any conclusions from the mere fact that the cost of collection is higher in one Province than in another. With regard to the difference in the cost of the Police in Bengal and Bombay, I may remark that wages are higher in Bombay than in Bengal. The cost of the Bombay Police also includes about six lakhs on account of Special Police in Native States, the cost being recovered from these States. It also includes nearly five lakhs on account of alienation of Land Revenue in favour of the village-officers connected with the Police. Bombay is the only Province in which such alienations are passed through the accounts.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao also calls attention to the increase in superannuation allowances. There is, from the nature of the case, a steady growth of expenditure under this head, which is no more to be wondered at than is the growth of population and of general revenue.

"It must be recollected that there has been in past years a great increase in the number of officers employed under the Government of India, and the inevitable result is the growth of superannuation charges.

"There has also been in the current year some temporary increase of charge owing to superannuation allowances being paid monthly instead of quarterly in England. The decision to pay certain pensions in England at the favourable exchange of 1*s.* 9*d.* added something to the expenditure. The normal increase of expenditure under this head is about Rs. 4¾ lakhs yearly.

"The Hon'ble Mr. Chentsal Rao has referred to the advances on account of Land Improvement, and expresses a hope that the amount set aside for this purpose may be increased.

"The amount that can be devoted to such purposes is necessarily limited, but I believe more money is being advanced now than was formerly the case, and I hope it may be possible to increase it still further in future years. The total provision placed at the disposal of Local Governments for advances to agriculturists in the coming year is rather more than 33 lakhs of rupees. This is nearly three times the amount actually advanced in 1888-89. In 1891-92 and in the current year very large amounts were advanced, but these high advances were made in consideration of the drought and scarcity that prevailed in Madras, Bombay and Ajmere.

"A reference to paragraph 33 of the Financial Statement for next year will show how great are the claims of all kinds on the Government of India at the present moment, and I have been agreeably surprised that we have been able to meet them as fully as we have done."

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—"I wish, in the first place, to acknowledge, as my Hon'ble Finance Colleague has done, the considerate and practical character of the observations elicited by the presentation of the Financial Statement.

"It will, I daresay, have struck Hon'ble Members that the situation with which the Government of India finds itself confronted is not a bad illustration of what is sometimes spoken of as the irony of events. It is certainly not a little mortifying to us that upon this, the first, occasion, when the discussion of the Financial Statement has taken place as a matter of right under the provisions of the Act of last year, we should be driven to lay before the Council so discouraging an account of our finances, and to add the admission that, for the present, it is beyond our power to describe the means by which we can hope to extricate ourselves from the difficulties and embarrassments which surround us. How much pleasanter it would have been if the Hon'ble Financial Member had been able to tell you of overflowing coffers, or, if they were, for the moment, less full than we could have wished, to explain to you the measures by which he looked forward to re-filling them in a suitable manner. I can assure my hon'ble colleagues that, if the suspense and uncertainty through which we are passing are trying to the public, they are not less trying to us.

"I believe, however, that the Budget which my hon'ble friend laid upon the table last week will serve a very useful purpose. It is, I cannot help thinking, the most striking object lesson in Indian finance which has yet been given to the world. My hon'ble friend reports to us that in two years the fall in exchange has added to our liabilities a sum exceeding four crores of rupees, a strain which he has said with truth our finances are at present unable to bear. We find ourselves compelled to restrict as closely as possible our expenditure upon those useful works on which this country depends so much for the development of its vast resources, and we are within a measurable distance of new taxation, the amount and incidence of which it is impossible to foretell, but which, if we are driven to impose it, will certainly be of an onerous kind. We are threatened with all these misfortunes, not because we have plunged the country into war, not because we have recklessly undertaken new expenditure, but because our medium of exchange is one the value of which is liable to violent and unforeseen fluctuations which we are entirely unable to control. It struck me, when the Hon'ble Member was delivering his speech last Thursday, that nothing could have given more point to what he said as to this part of his case than his announcement that, in the interval of time between the compilation of the Estimates and their submission to this Council, the further fall which had taken place was sufficient, if maintained throughout the year, to add Rx. 700,000 to our expenditure. There has, I am glad to say, since been some recovery, but the fact is none the less worthy of attention.

"My hon'ble friend is, I am afraid, but too well justified in regarding our position with grave apprehension. Not that, under ordinary circumstances, a deficit in an Indian Budget is necessarily a cause for very serious alarm. A country which has contracted large sterling liabilities, and which has to meet them from revenue collected in silver, cannot expect to adjust the income and expenditure of each year that passes with close precision. If these fluctuations were of an ordinary kind, if there were a reasonable prospect that an oscillation in one direction would be followed by an oscillation in another, we might well be content to find that, one year with another, our average income balanced our average expenditure during a term of years. Judged by this criterion, our financial history during the last four years is satisfactory enough. The Hon'ble Financial Member would be able to show that, taking the first four years of his own term of office as Finance Minister, he has had a net surplus of Rx. 5,686,000, an amount which would cover any deficit with which we can conceivably be confronted in his fifth year. Unfortunately for us, however, it is impossible to limit the question in this manner. We have to consider, not so much the years which are past and gone as those which lie immediately ahead of us, and, if we look forward to these, there can be no doubt that we have cause for serious alarm. In spite of the slight re-action which is apparently taking place, there is absolutely nothing to show that the rapid fall in the gold value of the rupee has yet come to an end, and we should remember that, with each further fall, our difficulties increase at a progressive rate. To make my meaning clear I may explain that, whereas a fall of one farthing in the gold value of the rupee, when exchange is at 1*s.* 6*d.*, involves a loss to the Government of India of 29½ lakhs, a similar fall, when exchange is at 1*s.* 4*d.*, means a loss of 37½ lakhs, while, if the same fall takes place at 1*s.* 2*d.*, the loss rises to no less a sum than 48½ lakhs. No re-adjustments of taxation can keep pace with such a downward progress as this.

"It is this prospect, and this alone, that makes the outlook so alarming. In other respects I believe the financial position of this country to be perfectly sound, and, as Sir Griffith Evans has pointed out, there are not wanting hopeful elements upon which it is possible to dwell with satisfaction. Our total indebtedness is not great, and the larger part of it has been incurred upon useful works for which the State obtains a fair return, or which may, at all events, be regarded as valuable assets. We have been extremely careful to avoid reckless borrowing, and we have indeed, as the Hon'ble General Brackenbury has truly said, met out of ordinary revenue many liabilities which in other countries would have been provided for out of borrowed capital. Our land-revenue has, as the Hon'ble Financial Member has shown, risen steadily in spite of somewhat adverse circumstances, and it will continue to rise. Our income from railways is progressive, and the gradual development of our commercial lines will, I feel no doubt, add still further to our resources.

"The large expenditure which has taken place during recent years upon special defences should, in the course of the next two years, come to an end, and our Military Budget will be thereupon relieved of a sum of some 40 or 50 lakhs per annum.

"These accessions of wealth would, in all probability, counterbalance the gradual fall in our revenue from opium—a revenue which is threatened both by Chinese competition and by political influences—but for the continued fall in the gold value of the rupee. It is, however, melancholy to reflect that, although we now take Rx. 25,000,000 of land-revenue from the people of India, instead of the Rx. 21,000,000 which we received twenty years ago, the larger sum, if tens of rupees be in each case converted into sovereigns at the price of the day, represents only £15½ millions, instead of the £19½ millions for which the smaller sum was interchangeable in the seventies.

"The same falling off has taken place in the gold value of our receipts from other kinds of taxation; the tax-payer's contribution, measured in rupees, increases steadily, but, measured by the standard made use of by the countries with which two-thirds of our business is transacted, the standard in which one-third of our own liabilities has to be met, it has shrunk below the level at which it stood in the seventies; and, if the United States of America were to discontinue their purchases of silver, and a further fall in the gold value of the rupee were to follow, none of the resources which I have indicated would enable us to meet the catastrophe in which we should for the moment be involved.

"It would not surprise me to find that we are asked, under these circumstances, why we do not take the public into our confidence and tell them, at least hypothetically, in what manner we believe that we might extricate ourselves from a position of so much anxiety. I must, however, express my entire concurrence in the view of the Hon'ble Financial Member when he told the Council that it would be idle for us to disclose the nature of the remedies to which we may be driven to resort until we have been made aware of the decision of the Home authorities in regard to the currency question. It is conceivable that the effect of that decision may be to give early, if not immediate, relief to our finances. Upon the other hand, if that relief is not obtained, the situation will probably not remain as it is. If it is not improved, it will, bad as it now is, probably change for the worse—perhaps a good deal for the worse—and no conjectures which we can make will help us to gauge beforehand the dimensions of the difficulty which might then confront us. That we should, in this event, have to raise large sums by taxation does not admit of a doubt. How large they will be we have no means of judging, and we cannot, therefore, say how they might best be raised. Hon'ble Members, and the public generally, are perfectly well aware of the sources to which the Government of India is able to look for an increase of revenue, but it would be not only useless but mischievous to discuss projects for new taxation at a moment when we are in ignorance of the amount of revenue which we should require in order to restore financial equilibrium.

"I have only one observation to add upon this subject, which is that, should we find it necessary during the present summer to resort to new taxation in order to meet the deficit, we do not think it would be consistent with our duty to legislate for the purpose at Simla, and we should, therefore, in the event which I have contemplated, not hesitate, if necessary, to call the Council together again at Calcutta for a special session. Whether this course will, or will not, be necessary is absolutely out of our power to determine at the present time.

"With reference to the question of our military expenditure, I need add very little to what has been so well and clearly said by the Hon'ble Military Member. That expenditure has, no doubt, increased during recent years.

"I am, however, far from believing that the increase which has taken place necessarily convicts the military authorities of extravagance. The Hon'ble Military Member was able to shew that, here also, the fall in exchange has laid upon us a continually increasing burden. Since 1887-88 the military estimates have been increased by no less a sum than Rx. 360,000 owing to this cause.

"Again, there has, undoubtedly, been a considerable expenditure due to the fact that more regard is paid to the comfort and well-being of our troops than formerly. I have no doubt that this money has been well spent—'well and wisely spent,' as Sir Griffith Evans has said—upon the improvement of the army. We know that great difficulty is found in obtaining suitable recruits owing to the competition of other professions, and, unless we pay, feed, clothe and house our men properly, we shall find it impossible to attract to the ranks the proper class of soldier, either Native or British.

"Besides this, additional expense is constantly imposed upon us owing to alterations in the equipment and armament of the troops. If a new rifle is invented, or a new kind of ammunition adopted for the rest of the army, we cannot refuse to adopt it for the army of India. This is not, I think, entirely due to the influence of the 'enthusiastic soldiers,' to whom Sir Griffith Evans referred. I think there are many enthusiastic civilians who would loudly complain of us if we were to refuse to furnish our soldiers with the most improved arms and equipment.

"Nor must it be forgotten that, of late years, our military liabilities have very greatly increased, partly owing to the near approach of Russia on our western frontiers, partly because, by the annexation of Upper Burma, a great addition has been made both to the British Empire and to that fringe of unsettled country which adjoins our frontier, and within which we are obliged to maintain some kind of order, not from a desire to interfere gratuitously with those independent tribes of whom Sir Griffith Evans spoke, but for the protection of our settled districts. My hon'ble friend seemed to be under the impression that, in such cases, we were inclined to take advantage of the high state of preparedness of our army in order to launch our troops upon these fruitless operations. All I can say is that I can testify to the reluctance of the military authorities to allow their regular troops and their transport animals to be used in small bodies in these remote places, and I am under the impression that in the recent operations on the Kachin frontier, which I think my hon'ble friend must have had in his mind, the columns employed consisted mainly of military police.

"It is no doubt, primâ facie, very serious that the 1893-94 estimates should show an increase over the Budget of 1892-93. But the increases of expenditure which have been forced upon us by circumstances which we are absolutely powerless to control amount to a larger sum than that by which the Military Budget for 1892-93 has been exceeded. The increase in the estimates amounts, excluding expeditions, to 54½ lakhs; the increase in the obligatory expenditure, to which I have referred, exceeds that sum. Of the increase, no less than 24 lakhs are due to the fall in exchange, while 7½ lakhs are due to the rise of prices, and 8 lakhs to fluctuations which may be described as automatic, and which we are quite unable to regulate.

"It is, therefore, beyond our power to prevent the expenditure of 1893-94 from exceeding that of 1892-93, except by insisting upon very large retrenchments, which it would be impossible to carry out suddenly, and which, if they could be carried out, would seriously impair the efficiency of our army.

"Again, it should be remembered that, out of the total of Rx. 15,700,000 shewn in the military estimates for 1893-94, about Rx. 12,000,000 are for the pay, food and pensions of the army. Large economies in military expenditure can, I believe, only be effected by cutting down the numbers of the army, or by diminishing its pay, or by depleting our reserves of stores. A diminution of the pay of the army is out of the question. We shall be fortunate if we are not compelled to increase it before we are much older. I should be sorry to be a party to the depletion of our reserves of stores, and I trust that such a course will never find favour. It seems to follow that, if India is unable to bear the present military expenditure, we shall have to consider whether the strength of the army is greater than is absolutely necessary for the safety of the country. I for one am not prepared to admit this.

"I therefore greatly doubt whether we shall find it possible to make large reductions in our military expenditure, although we must do all in our power to resist further attempts to increase it. Two years hence our special defences will, as I said just now, it is to be hoped, be completed, and our military expenditure thereby reduced by some 50 lakhs per annum. We shall spare no pains to economize in other directions, but I wish to avoid holding out expectations which we may be unable to fulfil. I can, however, assure the Council that the Government of India desires, as earnestly as Sir Griffith Evans does, to avoid a recurrence of exceptional expenditure on expeditions, or on any other military objects, the necessity of which is in any degree open to question.

"There is one other matter as to which I must add a few words. It is that to which reference has been made by the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens and the Hon'ble Dr. Lethbridge. I am not at all surprised that they should have mentioned it, or that they should have reminded the Council of the grievous hardship to which European officers in the services of the Government of India have lately been subjected owing to the rapid fall of exchange which has taken place during the last two years. Nor have I any complaint to make of the Hon'ble Mr. Stevens' account of what passed when, at the end of January, I had the honour of receiving at Government House a deputation from the Services. I then stated that the Secretary of State had left us in no doubt as to the sympathy with which Her Majesty's Government regarded their case. I said that we could not expect the sufferers to tolerate, for an indefinite period, the distress which they had borne with so much self-command for some time past, and I expressed my hope that the time was approaching when we should be able to meet, in a just and reasonable manner, the claims which the deputation had urged upon me.

When I uttered these words I certainly expected that, by the time the Budget Statement would be made, the suspense to which I referred would have been terminated, and I looked forward to including in our financial arrangements for the coming year suitable provision, either of a temporary or permanent character, to meet the case of the Services. I feel no doubt that those expectations were shared by our officers, and that it was generally, and I must say not unreasonably, anticipated that the Budget Statement would contain some specific engagement as to their case. If no provision has been made by my hon'ble friend, I trust that the omission will not be regarded as an indication that we desire to shirk the question, or to postpone its consideration for a day longer than we can help. As a matter of fact, the Government of India has, since the deputation was received, submitted to the Secretary of State specific proposals with this object, and suggested to him that provision for meeting those proposals should be made in the Budget.

"I have been authorised by His Lordship to make public in his own words the reasons for which he has found it impossible to sanction the necessary provision being made in the Budget. He telegraphed to us on the 7th of March as follows :—

'I greatly regret losses fallen on European officers, and am prepared to give consideration to any measures suggested by you for remedying grievances which you represent, but it is impossible to determine what measures should be taken, apart from the questions now before me with respect to the currency, decision upon which cannot be much longer delayed, but which cannot be expected before the Budget.'

"That is how the case of the Services stands, and I think it will be evident to Hon'ble Members that it is beyond our power, for the present, to do more than has been already done."

The Council adjourned sine die.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, March 25th, 1893.

During the week under review the weather over India has been of the ordinary cold weather type. A depression travelled down the Gangetic plain from the Punjab to Bengal and as it advanced eastward rain on the plains and rain and hail on the hills accompanied it. Pressure rose rapidly in the rear of the disturbance, and a high pressure area was formed over North-West India, so that from the 20th to the 22nd readings were high over North-West India and low over Bengal, and northerly breezes prevailed over Northern India. During the latter half of the week the barometer generally rose in North-Eastern and fell in North-Western India, so that pressure at first became very uniform, and then, the change continuing, became highest in the north-east and lowest in the north-west, where a depression was appearing. Over the whole country the weather remained unusually cool, the abnormal deficiency of temperature for the whole country for the week being five and a half degrees.

The chart of the 19th showed pressure highest in Sind, and lowest over the Gangetic plain and the Punjab, with a deepish depression over the east of the Punjab and the North-West Himalayas. Abnormal easterly winds prevailed over the Gangetic plain, while elsewhere the directions were very irregular. Owing to the disturbed condition of pressure the winds at several northern stations were strong to a gale. The air had become damper over a large part of the country and rain had fallen over the north of the Punjab, over the Gangetic plain and over North Bengal. At Gnatong, Bahraich, Mussoorie and Chakrata the amounts received exceeded one inch. On the 20th pressure was increasing more or less briskly over North-West India and decreasing elsewhere. Readings were highest over the north-west of the Punjab, while the low pressure area had been transferred south-eastward to West Bengal. In consequence northerly winds prevailed over North-Western and Central India, and southerly winds over Bengal, while elsewhere the directions remained variable. The easterly winds were disappearing from the Gangetic plain. Thundershowers were reported from the North Punjab and from North-East India, the amount of rain received being moderate or small. On the morning of the 21st pressure was increasing almost everywhere, but the general distribution of pressure and the direction of the winds were practically unchanged. Hail and snow showers had fallen at the stations in the North-West Himalayas, and thunderstorms had given rain to a considerable part of Bihar, Bengal and Assam. The chart of the 23rd showed a considerable modification in the distribution of pressure. The barometer had fallen in the north-west and the high pressure area had given way, while the low pressure area over Bengal had spread south-westward and extended over the whole of the east of the Peninsula. The wind had shifted to the southward over a large part of North-West India, but elsewhere the directions were little changed. Thunderstorms continued to give rain to Lower Bengal and Assam. On the 23rd the barometer was rising briskly over Bengal, and pressure had become very uniform throughout the Indian region. The winds were variable in direction and in places were strong and squally. Hail and rain showers had occurred on the hills, and thunderstorms continued to give light to heavyish rain to Lower Bengal and Assam. On the 24th the barometer was generally rising except in Burma. Readings were comparatively low over Oudh, North Bengal and the Assam Valley and in the south of the Peninsula and high in the intervening region. The wind directions were fairly normal. Showers had occurred around the north-west and north of the Bay. The chart of the 24th showed that pressure had decreased over North-West India and Baluchistan and increased elsewhere. In North-East India the rise had been brisk. A depression had appeared over Sind, while readings were high over the central parts of the country and South-West Bengal, and highest in Assam. The winds were fully cyclonic over North-West India and more or less variable elsewhere. A few local showers were reported.

Temperature.— The unsettled weather which prevailed over a large part of Northern India at the commencement of the week, and on the North-Western Himalayas and in North-Eastern India throughout most of the week kept the temperature low, and the mean temperature of week for the whole country was 5°·6 below the normal. The coldest days relatively to the normal were the 23rd and 24th, when the deficiency exceeded 7°·0. The following table shows the variations of the mean temperature from the normal on each day of the week for the principal provinces of India :—

The above shows the extent and intensity of the abnormal coolness. In Burma and Madras the deficiency was less than 2°·0, but in Bombay it increased to 4°·0, in Bengal and Assam to 5°·0, in the central parts of the country, Sind and Rajputana, to over 7°·0, and in the North-Western Provinces and the Punjab to over 8° 0.

Rain.—The concluding table shows that rain has again fallen fairly generally throughout the country except in parts of Burma, of the west of the Peninsula, of the Central Provinces and of North-Western India, where little or no rain was received. Of the 51 rainfall divisions twenty-six received effective rainfall, i.e., the average actual rainfall of the division was one-tenth of an inch or upwards, while twenty five received actually or practically no rain. The latter divisions were:—the Burma divisions except Upper Burma, Oudh (south), the North-Western Provinces (west), the Punjab (south and west), Coorg, the Konkan, the Bombay Deccan, Khandesh, Berar, the Central Provinces, Guzerat, Kathiawar, Sind, Central India (east), Rajputana (west), Hyderabad (south), Madras (central), and East Coast (central). The heaviest rainfall was reported from East Bengal and Cachar, where the average actual rainfall for the division was nearly 3 inches, but in the Assam Valley, in Deltaic Bengal and on the hills of the Punjab the average actual fall was between 1 and 2 inches. In Bengal and Assam, in several divisions of the North-Western Provinces and of the Punjab, as well as in Malabar, Central India (west) and the East Coast (north and south), the total rainfall of the week exceeded the normal, but elsewhere it was lighter than usual. The excess was large in Bengal.

The three concluding columns of the table which show the average actual and average normal rainfall for the period from February 26th to March 25th exhibit much the same characteristics as last week's table. In Tenasserim, Arrakan, Assam, the South Panjab, Kathiawar, Sind, and Rajputana (west), the total rainfall of the period has been less than usual, while in all other divisions the rainfall has equalled or exceeded the normal average. In very many divisions the excess is very large. This is particularly the case across the head of, and in the east of the Peninsula.

Division.	District.	Station.	Amount.
East Bengal	Noakhaly	Fenny	6·80 inches.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, April 1st, 1893.

The weather has remained cool and rather unsettled over a large part of the country during the week under review. A deep depression entered North-Western India on the 26th March, and occasioned squally showery weather over the Punjab on the 26th and 27th. On the 28th the showery weather was transferred to North-Eastern India. On the 31st another depression appeared in North-Western India, showers recommenced there, and feebly unsettled weather lasted during the 1st April. Over the Peninsula the weather was quieter than over Northern India, but thundershowers occurred there on the 26th, 27th, and 29th. The most remarkable feature in the weather during the week was the brisk rise of temperature which occurred at the close of the week, when in the north-west the mean temperature rose above the normal average for the first time for many weeks.

The chart of the 26th showed a barometric rise over the Peninsula and a fall elsewhere, the decrease being rapid over North-Western India. A deep and well defined depression was shown over Upper Sind, while pressure was highest over the east of the Peninsula. Strong cyclonic winds were blowing over North-Western India. Elsewhere the directions were variable. Rain had fallen in the north-west of the Punjab, in Kashmir, and at Colombo, Wellington, Trivandrum, Masulipatam, Hyderabad (Deccan), and Madura. Colombo received 1 inch, and Cherat, Wellington and Trivandrum about ½ inch. On the morning of the 27th the depression, which, on the previous day had been over Upper Sind, had reached the east of the Punjab, and cyclonic winds were again reported from North-Western India, circling round a centre near Ludhiana. Easterly winds prevailed at some stations in the Gangetic plain, and southerly to south-westerly winds over the west and north of the Bay. Rain was falling over the north of the Punjab, on the North-Western Himalayas, at Gnatong, at Sibsagar, and at several places in the Peninsula. At Madura, Cochin, and Wellington the amount received exceeded 1 inch. On the 28th pressure was increasing over the whole country, except in Bengal. The depression in the north-west had disappeared and been succeeded by a high pressure area, while a well defined depression was developing over Bengal. Cyclonic winds prevailed over North-Eastern India, northerly winds over North-Western India, and variable breezes over the Peninsula. Rain and hail had fallen during thunderstorms at several stations in North-Western and North-Eastern India. The chart of the 29th showed that pressure was rising briskly in Lower Bengal, but was changing by small amounts elsewhere. Readings were high over the west of the Punjab and over Rajputana and Central India, and low over Oudh and North Behar. The wind had shifted to west down the Gangetic plain, and the cyclonic circulation over Bengal had disappeared, but otherwise there was little change. Light rain had fallen over North-Eastern India and at a few places in the Peninsula. On the 30th pressure was falling generally. Readings were slightly higher in South Madras, in Guzerat, and in Assam, and slightly lower in Oudh and the west of the North-Western Provinces than elsewhere, but were on the whole very uniform. The wind was westerly down the Gangetic plain and variable elsewhere. The only rainfall was a few light widely scattered showers. On the 31st pressure was still falling over a large part of the country, and a large shallow depression had appeared over North-Western India. Readings remained very uniform and the winds were generally variable. The only rainfall was a light shower at Murree and Srinagar. The chart of the 1st April showed a general barometric rise, except at a few places in the Punjab. The depression over North-Western India had intensified somewhat, and gradients were somewhat steeper in that locality. An irregular cyclonic circulation prevailed around the depression in the north-west, and an easterly current prevailed up the Gangetic plain. Rain had fallen in Baluchistan, in the north of the Punjab, and at Bogra.

Temperature.—The principal feature in the temperature conditions of the past week has been the sudden rise which occurred at the close of the week.

The following table shows the variations of the mean temperature from the normal on each day of the week for the principal provinces of India :—

Province.	March.						April.	Mean variation of week.

Mean for whole India	—4·8	—3·3	—3·7	—4·6	—3·9	—1·9	—0·9	—3·3

The above shows that from the 26th to the 30th of March the abnormal depression of temperature, which has prevailed with greater or less intensity throughout India for many weeks past, was maintained unaltered, the general abnormal depression for the whole of India ranging between 4·8° and 3·3°; but on the 31st the general depression decreased to only 1·9°, and on April 1st to only 0·9°. In the Punjab, Central India, Guzerat, Sind, and Rajputana the mean temperature on the 1st exceeded the normal average for the first time for many weeks.

Rain.—The table at the close of the summary shows that the rainfall of the week was received in the extreme north-east of India, in the north-west, and in the south, the more central intervening regions having been without rain. Of the fifty-one rainfall divisions, thirteen received effective rainfall during the week, eight received an average actual rainfall for the division of less than one-tenth of an inch, and thirty had absolutely no rain during the week. The regions which received effective rainfall included the following divisions :—East Bengal, both the Assam divisions, the hill districts, and north-west division of the Punjab, Malabar, Madras (South Central), Coorg, Mysore, the East Coast (North and Central), Hyderabad (South), and Madras (South). The average actual fall was heaviest in Coorg, where it amounted to 1·04 inch. This was followed by 0·96 inch in Malabar, by 0·70 inch in Assam (Brahmaputra), and by 0·66 inch in Madras (South). The second column of the table shows that during the week under review comparatively little rain is expected in any part of the country, except in East Bengal and Assam. Hence, although the third column shows that over the greater part of the country the rainfall has been deficient, it is only in the divisions noticed above, viz., East Bengal and Assam, that the deficiency has much importance. Over a large part of the Peninsula the rainfall has been heavier than usual, the excess being as much as 0·80 inch in Malabar and Coorg and about 0·40 inch in Mysore and Madras (South).

The three concluding columns of the table show the average actual rainfall for each rainfall division for the period February 26th to April 1st, the average normal rainfall for the same period, and the excess or defect of the former compared with the latter expressed as a percentage. In Tenasserim, in Arakan, in Assam, in the south, north-west, and west of the Punjab, in Kathiawar, in Sind, and in the west of Rajputana the rainfall has been defective, but elsewhere it has been in excess, the excess in many cases being extremely large.

The following gives the largest total amounts received during the week as reported in the rainfall telegrams of the week :—

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weekly Report on the state of the Season and Prospects of the Crops.

Madras.—For week ending 1st April.—Light scattered showers in many parts, and good rain in the Southern Districts, Nilgiris, Malabar, and Circars. Improvement in Southern Districts continues. Harvest of late crops still proceeding; outturn poor to average. Fodder and water-supply generally sufficient, and condition of cattle fair. Prices rather easier in the Carnatic and Central Districts, stationary in Deccan and on West Coast, and rather dearer in the South and in Circars, but changes are small.

Bombay.—For week ending 5th April.—Slight rain in parts of five districts. Standing crops damaged by blight, rust, or rats in parts of five districts; otherwise good. Reaping of late crops nearly completed in six districts and progressing in the rest. Preparations for next season continue in nine and cotton picking in eight districts. Prices steady. Agricultural stock good and fodder sufficient.

Bengal.—For week ending 1st April.—There has been rain in parts of East Bengal and in Darjeeling; elsewhere practically no rain has fallen. The fine weather has improved agricultural prospects, and, notwithstanding the damage done by the late rain, the reports from most districts anticipate a favourable outturn from the spring harvest. A fair outturn of opium is also expected. The collection of this drug is nearly finished, and weighment is about to begin. Prospects of mahua (Bassia latifolia) are better, but mango prospects are indifferent. Spring rice and indigo promise well. Ploughing and sowing for autumn rice and jute continue. Prices of common rice remain almost stationary. Fodder and water-supplies are generally sufficient.

North-Western Provinces and Oudh.—For week ending 5th April.—Weather seasonable. Harvesting of spring crops continues, and threshing begun in a few places; a good outturn is expected. Opium collections nearly finished. Supplies ample. Prices fallen in most districts.

Punjab.—For week ending 5th April.—Rain has fallen in four districts. Barley and mustard reaping commenced in some districts. Sowings of extra spring crops going on and ploughings for the autumn crop commenced. Standing crops are generally good. Crops in parts of Lahore have been slightly damaged by unseasonable rain and hail. Condition of cattle is generally good. Fodder sufficient throughout the Province. Prospects of poppy crop excellent. Prices unsettled in one district, rising in two others, and stationary elsewhere.

Central Provinces.—For week ending 29th March.—Warm weather has at last set in, though the nights are still cool. The spring harvesting is in full swing in the northern districts, but nearly completed in the south. Crop prospects unchanged, but prices are relaxing in Nagpur.

For week ending 5th April.—Hot weather setting in. Prospects generally unchanged in Wardha, one of the districts which suffered most from the rainy weather of last month, and an eight-anna crop is now expected. Prices are becoming easier. Fodder generally sufficient.

Burma.—For week ending 1st April.—LOWER BURMA: Crop prospects in Karen hill clearings in Tavoy much improved owing to cessation of rain. UPPER BURMA: Cultivation of dry weather crops progressing satisfactorily. Transplanting commenced in several districts. Reaping of wheat, gram, and sesamum progressing in Sagaing. Experimental wheat crops in Shwebo are flourishing. Crops in Myingyan are improving, except in Pagan subdivision, where they have failed in most of the villages. The price of paddy has fallen considerably in Tavoy, but it is practically unchanged in other districts of Lower Burma, while in Upper Burma the price has risen considerably in one district and fallen slightly in another. The price of rice has fallen considerably in Tharrawaddy and risen slightly in Prome. There has been a very large rise in the Northern Shan States, but a large falling off in the Ruby Mines and Sagaing Districts. The price has also fallen slightly in Minbu and Southern Shan States, but has risen in Magwe and Yeu. Numbers on relief works: Meiktila 300.

Assam.—For week ending 4th April.—Weather seasonable. Sowing of summer paddy continues. Prospects good. Condition of cattle normal and fodder sufficient.

Mysore and Coorg.—For week ending 5th April.—MYSORE: Crops and prospects good. Harvesting operations continue in parts. Prices slightly risen in two districts.

COORG.—Rainfall slight. No standing crops, except coffee and cardamom. Prospects generally good. Prices stationary. Fodder and water-supply for cattle fair.

Berar and Hyderabad.—For week ending 5th April.—BERAR: Weather hot. Harvesting of spring crops in progress. Preparation of land for ensuing season continues. Fodder and water sufficient. Prices almost stationary.

HYDERABAD: Rainfall moderate during the week. Harvesting continues. Prices almost stationary.

Central India.—For week ending 29th March.—No rain fell during the week in any part of Central India, but the late rain and hail have damaged the standing crops in most parts. The probable outturn will be about the average, except in parts of Gwalior territory and Goona. Agricultural stock generally in fair condition. Pasturage good and sufficient. Prices of food-grains rising in one State, falling in another, and steady elsewhere. Opium crop is generally fair.

For week ending 5th April.—Crops being harvested in most parts of Central India; the outturn will be generally fair, but may be below average in a few places. Condition of agricultural stock is generally good. Pasturage sufficient. Prices of food-grains fluctuating in Gwalior, rising in Neemuch, falling in Goona and Bhopal, and steady elsewhere. Opium being collected in Bhopal, Bhopawar, and Western Malwa. Opium yield will probably be generally fair.

Rajputana.—For week ending 5th April.—Agricultural operations satisfactory. Harvesting commenced in five States and Ajmere. Standing crops and harvest prospects generally good, except in Kotah, where wheat is reported very unfavourable. Slight damage is also reported in parts of two other Agencies. Cattle generally good. Pasturage or fodder sufficient. Prices falling in five States, rising in three, fluctuating in one, and steady elsewhere.

Nepal.—For week ending 1st April.—Weather cloudy and misty. Prospects good.

WHEREAS by the Forest Rules sanctioned by the Government of India on the 21st May, 1855, and by the supplementary rules sanctioned by the Chief Commissioner of the Punjab on the 19th January, 1857, the Government assumed to itself the right to conserve all trees and waste-land in the Hazara District;

And whereas, consequent on the increased demand for timber and fuel, and the necessity of making better arrangements for the said conservancy, and for the purpose of defining more exactly the matters in which that conservancy consists, Regulations II of 1873, V of 1874 and II of 1879, for the conservancy of trees and waste-land in the Hazara District, were duly enacted and received the assent of the Governor General;

And whereas the entries regarding forests and waste-land made in the record-of-rights at the regular settlement of the Hazara District were made in accordance with the provisions of Regulation II of 1873;

And whereas it is now expedient to provide further for the preservation and management of trees and waste-land in the Hazara District;

It is hereby enacted as follows:

PRELIMINARY.

Title, extent, commencement and repeal.

1. (1) This Regulation may be called the Hazara Forest Regulation, 1893.

(2) It applies to the whole of the Hazara District, with the exception—

(b) of such ilaqas and villages as the Local Government may exempt from its operation; and

(3) It shall come into force on the first day of April, 1893.

(4) On and from that day the Hazara Forest Regulation, II of 1879, shall be repealed.

Definitions.

2. In this Regulation, unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context,—

Every person who is guilty of an offence by committing or abetting any of the acts prohibited by the last foregoing section shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine not exceeding five hundred rupees, or with both, and shall, in addition thereto, be liable to pay such compensation for damage done to the forest as the convicting Magistrate may direct.

CHAPTER III.

WASTE-LANDS OF VILLAGES.

Rights in waste-lands.

10. (1) Subject to the rights and power of the Government in respect to seigniorage and forest-conservancy as defined in this Regulation or in rules which may be made under it hereafter by the Local Government, and subject also to the claims of right-holders not being owners of the soil, all village-waste-lands are the property of the land-owners of the village in whose boundaries they are included; and all such land-owners are entitled to use free of charge for their own domestic and agricultural requirements any trees and forest-produce produced in the waste-lands of their village. But such land-owners shall have no right or power to sell any trees or brushwood growing in such lands except with the permission and through the agency of the Deputy Commissioner or other officer authorised by the Government, and all such sales shall be subject to payment to the Government of the seigniorage-fees as provided by section 25.

(2) The claims of right-holders other than land-owners of the village shall be recognised to the extent defined and recorded at settlement, or in case of doubt or dispute to the extent which may hereafter be defined by the Deputy Commissioner with the sanction of the Local Government, and the exercise of such rights shall be subject to the provisions of this Regulation and of such rules as may be made under it by the Local Government.

(3) All deodar trees in the Kagan ilaqa shall be deemed to be the property of the Government, and nothing in this section shall be held to affect the right of the Government thereto.

Power to protect waste-lands.

11. (1) Whenever it appears to be necessary to prohibit the breaking up for cultivation of waste-land or its occupation as sites for sheds or buildings in order to the better protection of—

(a) the crests and slopes immediately below the crests of hills within the limits of tree-vegetation,

(b) catchment-basins of streams, torrents or ravines,

(c) the banks and beds of rivers, streams, torrents and ravines,

(d) steep slopes,

(e) waste-lands which, though not situated in any of the above positions, are nevertheless of such value or utility for the supply of forest-produce or otherwise that their breaking up or occupation would in the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner be unadvisable, the Deputy Commissioner may issue orders prohibiting the breaking up or occupation of such waste-land, and defining the area to which such prohibition shall extend, and may cause the limits of such area to be shown on the village-map and to be demarcated on the ground with boundary-marks so far as may be necessary.

(2) All orders passed under section 8 of Regulation II of 1879 for the maintenance of waste-lands as village-forests shall be deemed to be orders passed under this section.

(3) No such order as is referred to in sub-section (1) or sub-section (2) shall be cancelled by the Deputy Commissioner without the sanction of the Commissioner of the Division, but the Deputy Commissioner may from time to time revise such orders by altering the boundary of the protected land so as to exclude any particular plot the protection of which may appear to be unnecessary, or by permitting the cultivation of any particular plot on condition of the erection of retaining walls sufficient to ensure its stability.

Power to protect trees in protected waste-lands.

12. Should it appear necessary in order to guard more securely against erosion or the formation or extension of ravines or landslips, the Deputy Commissioner may issue special orders forbidding, otherwise than with the permission in writing of the Forest-officer, the felling, lopping, barking, boring, girdling or otherwise injuring of trees or brushwood standing or growing on land protected under the last foregoing section and coming within any of the first four classes of land described in sub-section (1) of that section.

Power to set apart waste-land for growth of trees.

13. (1) Should the Deputy Commissioner be of opinion that in any estate there is no supply of timber or fuel adequate for the present and prospective wants of the residents, he may issue orders directing that an area of waste-land not exceeding one-tenth of the whole area of the estate be set apart in a convenient and suitable position, and may record a proceeding providing—

(a) for the strict forest-management of this area;

(b) for the enjoyment of its produce by the residents of the estate and any other right-holders, and for the due regulation of that enjoyment;

(c) for the recovery of costs of management of the area from the said residents and right-holders.

(2) No compensation shall be claimable by the land-owners or other right-holders of such land in respect of any orders passed under this section.

(3) No order passed under this section shall affect the areas mentioned or referred to in section 11, sub-section (1), so as to cause them to be closed to grazing before the first day of January, 1894.

Power of Deputy Commissioner to set apart waste-land for growth of trees on application of land-owners.

14. If in any case such proportion of the land-owners of the state as pay not less than two-thirds of the land revenue due thereon make an application to the Deputy Commissioner requesting that a stated area of waste-land owned in common by them be set apart for the growth of trees, the Deputy Commissioner shall have power to proceed in respect of that area as provided in the last foregoing section.

Provision for cases of danger from landslips, erosions, etc.

15. If in any case the head or banks of any stream should be in course of being dangerously eroded, or there should be imminent danger of the formation of ravines or the occurrence of landslips, the Deputy Commissioner may proceed with respect to such waste-land as it may be necessary to protect against such danger in the manner provided in sub-section (1) of section 13,

The Hazara Forest Regulation, 1893.

Appointment of Village-forest-officer.

16. (1) The Deputy Commissioner may appoint Village-forest-officers to manage the forestry of village-waste, whether protected under section 11 or not, and may issue general or special management orders to such officers for the prohibition of the barking, boring, girdling or otherwise injuring of trees or brushwood, and for the regulation of the felling or lopping of trees or brushwood in such waste for village-requirements. Until such Village-forest-officers are appointed no trees shall be felled without the permission in writing of the Deputy Commissioner or a Forest-officer.

(2) If in any case such waste is not managed in accordance with orders issued under sub-section (1), the Deputy Commissioner may direct that no trees be felled in the waste without the previous permission in writing of such officials of the Revenue and Forest Departments as may be authorized by him in this behalf.

Power to control firing waste-lands.

17. (1) The Deputy Commissioner may issue special orders in writing permitting the firing of any waste-lands, whether protected under section 11 or not, within such limits and subject to such conditions as he may think fit.

(2) The firing of waste-lands except with such permission, and the negligently allowing fire to extend thereto, are forbidden.

Copies of orders under this Chapter to be furnished to persons concerned.

18. A copy of every order issued by the Deputy Commissioner under this Chapter shall be furnished to the Village-forest-officer where such officer has been appointed, and shall be put up in a public place in the village concerned. 20. The Deputy Commissioner may cause to be summarily ejected any person cultivating land in contravention of an order passed under section 11, 13 14 or 15, and may direct that any building erected or crop grown on such land in contravention of such order be confiscated.

Cost of management.

21. The cost of management of any waste-land, and of the demarcation of any waste-land directed by the Deputy Commissioner to be demarcated in accordance with the provisions of this Chapter, may be recovered from all land-owners, or from all land-owners and right-holders, concerned as an arrear of land-revenue.

Seigniorage-fees.

25. (1) In the case of (a) trees felled and (b) fuel supplied for kilns from reserved forests, the Forest-officer will credit to the Government as forest-revenue the full price realised by the sale of the same, and, on the other hand, will debit the Government with and pay to the land-owners of the village the seigniorage-fees due according to the list of seigniorage-fees in force for the time being. ORGANISATION.

NATIVE ARMY.

No. 314.—The Governor-General in Council has had under his consideration the constitution of the regiments of Hindustani infantry of the Bengal Army. These regiments are now organised in class companies, but His Excellency, while acknowledging the loyalty and efficiency of these regiments and the gallant services rendered by them in the past, is of opinion that the formation of class regiments would lead to increased efficiency and would render the service more popular. Experience has shown that not only is a better class of recruit attracted to class regiments, but that all ranks are more happy and contented when serving exclusively with men of their own race and caste. The regimental system is more harmonious, promotion runs more fairly, and esprit de corps is greater in a class regiment than it can ever be in one made up of class companies. The Governor-General in Council is therefore pleased to announce that, with the sanction of the Right Hon'ble the Secretary of State for India, these regiments will from the 15th May 1893 be organised as class regiments and linked as follows:

By Dr Geo WATT, C I E,

Reporter on Economic Products

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral, each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names, habitat or source, history, properties and uses (both chemical and industrial), trade statistics, markets, etc The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages, Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages, Volume III contains the letters D, E F and half of G, Volume IV latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O, Vol VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and as such, will be a work of reference which it is hoped, may prove of considerable value

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, April 8th, 1893.

During the week under review the weather has been unsettled over Northern India. Although so late in the season, two depressions have appeared in the North-West, and the depressions themselves, or low pressure areas originating from them, have crossed Northern India to Bengal. Strong squally winds have prevailed around them and showers of rain fallen in their neighbourhood, both in North-Western and North-Eastern India, but over parts of the North-Western Provinces the passage of the disturbance only slightly affected the weather. Over the Peninsula the weather was steadily fine. Owing to the disturbed weather described above, the rise of temperature which had commenced last week was interrupted, and about the middle of the week the abnormal depression of temperature again became large.

On the morning of the 2nd April a well marked depression lay over the Eastern Punjab and Northern Rajputana. The barometer was, however, rising over North-Western India, and the disturbance was slighter than at the close of the preceding week. The winds over North-Western India were irregularly cyclonic, while elsewhere the directions were fairly normal. Showers of rain were reported from Kashmir, from the north-west of the Punjab, and from Baluchistan. Murree received 1½ inches, but elsewhere the amounts were small. On the morning of the 3rd a low pressure area extended south-eastward from the Punjab down the Gangetic plain to Orissa, having slight centres of depression, one over Central Punjab, and a second near Lucknow. Readings were high in the west and south of the Peninsula and in Assam. The winds varied very considerably in direction, but were fresh to strong in force at several stations. Rain had fallen over the greater part of the Punjab, over the west of the North-Western Provinces, and at Jacobabad and Bikanir. The amounts were generally less than ½ inch. The chart of the 4th showed that pressure had risen rapidly over North-Western India, and that the area of lowest pressure lay over the east of the North-Western Provinces and of the Central Provinces and the west of Bengal. Gradients were steepish for northerly winds over North-Western India, and a strong northerly current prevailed throughout that region. Cyclonic winds blew around the low pressure area, and elsewhere the directions were variable. The force continued fresh. Rain continued to fall over a large part of the Punjab and the west of the North-Western Provinces, and had commenced at Dhubri, Burdwan, and Barisal. At Srinagar, Ludhiana, and Dhubri the amount received exceeded one inch. On the 5th pressure was giving way again in the north-west, but was rising elsewhere. Consequently the steepish gradients noticed on the preceding day had disappeared, though the general distribution of pressure had not materially changed. North-westerly winds prevailed down the Gangetic plain and north-easterly winds over the central parts of the country and the north of the Bombay Presidency. The normal southerly winds prevailed over the west and north of the Bay, the force at Saugor Island and False Point being strong. The rainfall in North-Western India had ceased, but showers were falling over Assam and Bengal. The amounts were moderate. On the 6th the barometer was still falling in the north-west and rising elsewhere, and in consequence pressure had become very uniform throughout the Indian region. The winds were very little changed, and the strong southerly winds at the head of the Bay continued. A few showers were reported from Bengal and Assam, the heaviest fall being 1·11 inch at Dacca. The chart of the 7th showed that a depression had appeared over North-Western India, the centre being near Bikanir. Cyclonic winds prevailed around the low pressure area, but, except in Sind, the force was light. Except in North-Western India, the uniformity of pressure noticed on the preceding day continued, and the winds, except at the head of the Bay, were variable. Showers had recommenced in the north-west of the Punjab, and continued at a few places in Bengal and Assam. On the 8th a large depression overlay the western desert and the Gangetic plain, the lowest pressures being near Allahabad. Readings were highest in Assam and Burma. Strong southerly winds were blowing over the north of the Bay, while an irregular cyclonic circulation prevailed over Northern India. Rain was falling over the North-Western Himalayas, over the north of the Punjab, over North Bengal, over Assam, and over Malabar. At Sibsagar and Gnatong the fall exceeded one inch, and at Darjeeling two inches.

Temperature.—The rise of temperature which had commenced at the close of the previous week was maintained throughout India during the first two days of the week under review, but on the 4th a sudden fall took place, and the abnormal depression of temperature on the 4th, 5th, and 6th was nearly as large as at the commencement of last week. On the 7th temperature again rose, and on that and the following day the mean temperature was only 1½° below the normal average.

Province.	April.							Mean variation of week.

The above shows that for the whole of India there was a mean deficiency for the week of 1·6°, and that the provincial variations were all in defect. In the Punjab the mean deficiency exceeded 3·0°; in Bengal, Assam, the North-Western Provinces, and the Central Provinces it exceeded 2·0°; and in Central India, Guzerat, Sind, Rajputana, and Madras it was about 1·0°. In Burma and Bombay it was less than 1·0°.

Rain.—During the week under review the rainfall of India was confined mainly to the north-east and north-west divisions, the central and southern divisions remaining almost without rain. Of the fifty-one rainfall divisions, twelve received effective rain—i.e., the average actual rainfall of the division exceeded one-tenth of an inch; twelve more received some rain, but the average actual amount for the week was less than one-tenth of an inch, while twenty-seven divisions received absolutely no rain during the week. The regions which received actually or practically no rain included the following divisions:—All the Burma divisions, Orissa, Behar, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh divisions, the south and centre of the Punjab, Guzerat, Kathiawar, Sind, Rajputana, and all the central and southern divisions, except Malabar. The heaviest average actual rainfall reported is 2·04 inches in North Bengal: this is followed by 1·77 inch in the Brahmaputra division, Assam, and by 1·62 inch in the Surma division. Of the twenty-four divisions which received rain, twelve had more than the normal average fall of the week. These twelve were East Bengal, the Brahmaputra division of Assam, Deltaic Bengal, North Bengal, Chota Nagpur, the Punjab (South, Central, Submontane, North-West, West, and the Hill districts), and the East Coast (Central). The greatest excess was in North Bengal, the greatest deficiency in Assam (Surma), but, with the exception of these two divisions, the variations of the actual from the normal fall are small.

The three concluding columns of the table show that no practical change has taken place in the relative distribution of rainfall for the period. In the Assam and Burma divisions, in the south of the Punjab, in the Konkan, in Kathiawar, in Sind, and in Rajputana (West) the rainfall for the period from February 26th to the present date has been in defect of the average, while, on the contrary, in all other divisions it has been in excess—in some cases by very large amounts.

Divisions.	Districts.	Stations.	Amount.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weekly Report on the state of the Season and Prospects of the Crops.

Madras.—For week ending 8th April.—Few showers in parts of the Circars and Southern and West Coast districts. Sowings continue in Southern districts, and preparation for next season proceeding on West Coast. Harvest still proceeding in parts with moderate outturn. Water supply and fodder generally sufficient, and condition of stock generally good. Prices almost stationary or very slightly easier, but abnormally high rate in Southern districts still prevailing.

Bombay.—For week ending 12th April.—Slight rain in parts of four districts. Standing crops damaged by hail, blight, rats, or other causes in parts of four districts; otherwise condition good. Reaping of late crops nearly completed in six districts and progressing in others. Preparations for next season continue in thirteen and cotton picking in seven districts. Poppy in Baroda diseased and outturn below the average. Prices steady. Agricultural stock good and fodder sufficient.

Bengal.—For week ending 8th April—There was general rain during the week in Central, Northern, and Eastern Bengal; practically no rain elsewhere. The spring harvest is nearly completed, and reports of the outturn continue satisfactory with few exceptions. In parts of the Burdwan division distress necessitating relief may occur if conditions prove adverse, but there is no cause for immediate anxiety. Opium is being weighed with fair results. Spring rice, indigo, and sugarcane are doing well. Sowing of autumn rice and jute is well forward. Prices are steady. Cattle are generally reported to be in good condition, and supplies of fodder and water are sufficient.

North-Western Provinces and Oudh.—For week ending 12th April.—Weather seasonable. Spring harvest approaching completion in most districts. Threshing and winnowing continue in some districts; outturn generally good. Irrigation of sugarcane, indigo, and extra crops continues. Prices have fallen in many districts. Fodder and water supply ample.

Punjab.—For week ending 12th April.—Rain has fallen in most districts. Reaping of certain spring crops commenced; extra spring sowings and autumn ploughings going on. Prospects of standing crops generally good. The recent rain will probably lessen the yield in part of the Amritsar district. Locusts have appeared in Umballa, but did not do much harm to crops. Slight injury is reported to have been done to crops by hail in parts of the Shahpur district. Condition of cattle generally fair. Fodder sufficient throughout the Province. Prospect of poppy crops is good. Prices rising in one district, falling in another, and stationary elsewhere.

Central Provinces.—For week ending 12th April.—The progress of threshing is showing that in the Southern districts that portion of the wheat crop which was soon after the rain of October has yielded less than a half crop of shrivelled grain, but the early sown crop shows better, and in the Northern districts the harvest is generally satisfactory. Prices have a downward tendency.

Burma.—For week ending 8th April.—LOWER BURMA: Crops in the Karen hill clearings in Tavoy much improved owing to cessation of rain. UPPER BURMA: Sowing and transplanting of dry-weather paddy progressing. Reaping of wheat, gram, and sesamum continues in Sagaing, and of beans in Lower Chindwin. Reaping of wheat completed in Southern Shan States. Condition of standing crops good, except in part of one district, where crops have failed. Except for slight increases in two districts, the price of paddy in Upper and Lower Burma is practically unchanged. In Lower Burma the price of rice has risen slightly in one district and fallen in three others, while in Upper Burma it has risen in three districts and fallen in one. Number on relief works: Meiktila 325.

Assam.—For week ending 11th April.—Weather seasonable. Sowing of late rice continues. Prospects good. Condition of cattle normal. Fodder and water sufficient.

Mysore and Coorg.—For week ending 12th April.—MYSORE: Crops and prospects favourable, except in parts of three districts, where the rainfall was insufficient. Sugarcane being harvested in parts. Prices risen in one district.

COORG.—No rain. Prospects of coffee and cardamom crops fair. Prices stationary. Fodder and water supply for cattle sufficient.

Berar and Hyderabad.—For week ending 12th April.—BERAR: Weather hot. Harvesting of spring crops nearing completion. Preparation of land for ensuing season in progress. Fodder and water sufficient. Cattle generally healthy. Prices almost steady.

HYDERABAD: No rain during the week. Harvesting of hot-weather crops continues. Many tanks are full. Prices risen slightly.

Central India.—For week ending 12th April.—Harvesting of crops completed in Neemuch district and in progress in other parts of Central India. Outturn in Neemuch good; in other parts expected to be fair, except in Gwalior and Goona, where it will be below average. Condition of agricultural stock generally good. Pasturage sufficient. Prices of food-grains fluctuating in two States; steady or high elsewhere. Opium collected in Bhopawar and being collected in Bhopal and Western Malwa. The yield will probably be fair.

Rajputana.—For week ending 12th April.—Agricultural operations satisfactory; harvesting going on. Standing crops and harvest prospects generally good, except in two Agencies, where wheat is reported bad. Agricultural stock generally good. Pasturage or fodder sufficient. Prices falling in four States, fluctuating in Ajmere and two States, and steady elsewhere.

Nepal.—For week ending 7th April.—Weather fine. Prospects good.

Extract from the Proceedings of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department (Surveys),—dated Simla, the 8th April, 1893.

Read—

Letter No. 138, dated 8th February 1893, from the Director of the Geological Survey of India, submitting the Annual Report on the Geological Department and Museum for the year 1892.

RESOLUTION.

The issue of the Resolution with which the Annual Report on the operations of the Geological Department is published has on this occasion awaited the sanction of Her Majesty's Secretary of State to the final scheme for the reorganization of the department which was submitted in 1892, the year under report.

2. During the earlier period of its history the duties of the department were almost entirely confined to scientific investigation and to the examination of the most prominent geological rocks and formations of India itself or of the border regions beyond it. The explorations made, although primarily of purely scientific interest, were also necessary as a basis for the discovery of the mineral resources of the country. In recent years, however, the demand both by the State and the public for more complete and positive information regarding the commercial minerals has expanded so greatly that the attention of the officers of the department has been considerably, and perhaps unduly, diverted from exploration of a scientific character to investigations of more practical interest. Thus oil, coal, tin, and iron have successively found a prominent place in the more recent annual programmes. The wider scientific scheme, upon which a sound and comprehensive knowledge of the distribution of minerals mainly depends, appeared to be in danger of serious interruption. Proposals were accordingly submitted to the Secretary of State which, while securing the steady progress of the scientific survey, would admit also of a definite and material amount of practical investigation, as well as, if necessary, of the employment of trained experts on explorations requiring special and technical knowledge. The scheme has now been established, and was explained in detail in the Resolution No. 3—74 issued by the Government of India on the 8th March 1893.

Briefly the scheme requires that two-thirds of the officers of the department should be primarily engaged on the scientific explorations necessary for the completion of the Geological Survey, and the remaining third on the practical investigation of mineral fields. The exploration of fields of commercial minerals will, however, be confined to such preliminary examination of them as may be necessary to supply general information regarding their character and extent to capitalists and promoters, upon whom will rest the responsibility of the more detailed prospecting required for the conduct of actual operations.

3. The work upon which the officers of the department were engaged during the year under review is shown in the following table, in which also is roughly indicated the character of the exploration, or, in other words, whether the main object of the work performed was the continuation of the scientific survey or the collection of further information regarding commercial minerals for practical purposes. In some cases both objects have been more or less simultaneously secured.

Do.	Central Himalayas	Dr. Diener's expedition	Do.
Mr. Bose	Southern Burma	Geological Research	Do.
Mr. Datta	Thayetmyo, Burma	Geological Survey.	Do.

4. The most important of the scientific operations indicated in the above abstract were those conducted in the Central Himalayas in co-operation with Dr. Diener, an eminent specialist sent out from Vienna by Messrs. Griesbach and Middlemiss of the Geological Survey. The expedition was under the superintendence of Mr. Griesbach, to whom much credit is due for the tact and energy which have led to success in the prosecution of researches which are certain to prove of high scientific interest.

Valuable contributions to the scientific survey were also made in the course of their work by Mr. Holland in Madras, Messrs. Noetling and Griesbach in Burma, Mr. Middlemiss in Hazara, and Mr. LaTouche on the North-Western Frontier.

5. The advance due to exploration by Geological officers in knowledge of the coal-fields of the country has been great. A reference to the "Statistical Tables of British India" will show that between 1878 and 1890 the annual outturn of coal has increased by over a million tons; and, in fact, has nearly doubled. The centres of production, which in the former year were almost confined to Bengal, have now been extended to Assam, Punjab, Central Provinces, the Nizam's territory, and recently to Burma. There can be little doubt that this large extension, which is capable of indefinite development, is in a great measure due to the pioneering of the Geological Survey Department.

The department has also done much to determine the character of the oil resources of India. Although the prospects are not very encouraging, the special researches of Mr. Oldham in Baluchistan and Mr. LaTouche in the Sherani country are being followed up by experimental borings at Sukkur, the outcome of which, combined with the experience gained by the Punjab Oriental Oil Company, will probably set at rest at an early date the question whether any important or permanent supply of oil can be secured in Northern India. More practical results have been attained in Burma where leases of several important areas in the oil tracts previously surveyed by Dr. Noetling were concluded during the year.

The researches in Tenasserim have resulted in the concession of a large tin field in Southern Burma, which is not unlikely to lead to the further development of that metal in the same neighbourhood, and have also brought to prominent notice the existence of extensive fields of coal of a quality equal or superior to any yet discovered on Indian territory. These researches were conducted by Mr. Hughes, and the Governor General in Council takes this opportunity to express his deep regret at the serious accident which has interrupted the energetic and useful career of this officer.

6. The Government of India are anxious to associate natives of India educated in the country with the European officers of the department in the work of original investigation and research, and it was with this object that two apprenticeships were opened a short time ago for Indian students. But the attempt has for the present had to be abandoned in consequence of the difficulty of obtaining young men suitably educated for such a career. Students must, when young, be instructed how to observe, and how to draw precise conclusions from observations, before they can be expected to become competent for efficient work in any branch of scientific exploration. One step in the right direction has been taken by the Government of Bengal, which has opened Geological classes at the Presidency College under the teaching of Mr. Holland of the Geological Department; but it is still doubtful whether college lectures will secure the results required unless the students who attend them have previously received an education which will ensure their being able to turn their new knowledge to practical account.

7. The thanks of the Government of India are due to Dr. King, the Director, and the officers of the department mentioned in this Resolution for the ability and vigour with which the work of the department has been conducted throughout the year of report.

ORDER.—Ordered, that a copy of the foregoing Resolution be forwarded to the Director, Geological Survey of India, and to Local Governments and Administrations, and that it be published in the Supplement to the Gazette of India.

And whereas the silver so sent has been coined into rupees of fineness identical with that prescribed by law for rupees of the Government of India:

And whereas the rupees so coined are identical in weight with the rupees of the Government of India and the devices upon their obverse and reverse differ from the devices on coins now made or issued by the Bikanir State, and have been approved by the Governor-General in Council, and upon each of the rupees so coined its value in money of the Government of India is inscribed in the English language:

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

[Revised Advertisement.]

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage, in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets, etc. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and half of G; Volume IV, latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O; Vol. VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol. VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and, as such, will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, April 15th, 1893.

Very uniform pressures have prevailed throughout India during the greater part of the week under review. This condition has, however, been accompanied with feebly unsettled weather over a large part of Northern India. As was the case in the preceding week, depressions, very slight in themselves, but sufficiently marked to disturb the weather, have slowly drifted across the country, and occasioned irregular cyclonic winds and showery weather. Over the Peninsula the weather has not been influenced by these depressions, and has been throughout fine. The temperature has increased faster than usual, so that, while at the commencement of the week the mean of the whole country was between 1½° and 2·0° below the normal, at the close of the week it was between 1½° and 2·0° above.

The chart of the 9th showed a shallow depression over the Western desert, and a second over Behar and the neighbouring parts of the North-Western and Central Provinces, while readings were highest in Assam and Upper Burma. Gradients were moderate over Bengal and very slight elsewhere. Irregular cyclonic movements of the wind were reported from the neighbourhoods of the two depressions, while elsewhere the directions were variable. Thunderstorms had given rain to parts of North-Eastern India and to parts of North-Western India. In the former region the amounts received were moderate, exceeding 1 inch at Silchar and Mymensingh, and exceeding ½ inch at Sibsagar and Dhubri. On the 10th the barometer was rising almost everywhere, but the general distribution of pressure was the same as on the previous day. The winds were also very little changed. Rain had ceased in North-Western India, but continued in North-Eastern India, the largest fall being 1·15 inch at Bogra. At Negapatam and Belgaum also light showers had fallen. On the following day, the 11th, the pressure changes were irregular, and the barometer was very uniform throughout the country. The wind directions were very variable. Light rain had fallen during thunderstorms over a large part of Bengal, and showers were also reported from Tavoy, the south of the Peninsula, and Ceylon. On the 12th pressure was falling everywhere, but the changes had not affected the distribution, the barometer readings being very uniform everywhere. The wind was easterly and south-easterly up the Gangetic plain, but elsewhere the directions were fairly normal. Rain had ceased in Bengal, but scattered showers were reported from the west and south of the Peninsula, and local showers at Thayetmyo and Quetta. The chart of the 13th showed that pressure was still giving way everywhere, and that a large shallow depression had appeared over North-Western India. Pressure was high in Assam and on the west coast of the Peninsula. Easterly winds continued to blow up the Gangetic plain, and southerly winds over the west and north of the Bay. Elsewhere the directions remained variable. Thundershowers were again reported from the west and south of the Peninsula, but the amounts were small. There was no rain in other parts of the country. On the morning of the 14th the distribution of pressure was remarkable. Pressure had risen fast over the north-west of the Punjab and steep gradients prevailed over that province. At the same time a large shallow area of low pressure overlay the western desert and the Gangetic plain. Strong winds prevailed over the Punjab, and thundershowers had fallen at several stations in the north-west of that province. Light showers were also reported from a few places in the west of the Peninsula and at Colombo. On Saturday, the 15th, relatively high pressures were reported from Burma and the south of the Bay on the one hand and from the Indus Valley on the other, while in the intervening region pressure was relatively low, with a centre of depression over Behar and the east of the North-Western Provinces. The wind was unusually northerly over North-Western India, but elsewhere the directions were fairly normal. A few light scattered showers was the only rainfall reported.

Temperature.—The mean temperature for the whole of India for the first time for many weeks had exceeded the normal average. The excess is only 0·2°. A very marked rise of temperature has, however, spread over India during the week. The excessive temperature first appeared over Central India, Guzerat, Sind, and Rajputana, and was confined to that region during the 9th and 10th. On the 11th it spread to the Punjab, on the 12th to Bombay, on the 13th to the North-Western Provinces, on the 14th to Burma, and on the 15th prevailed over the greater part of the country.

The following table shows the variations of the mean temperature from the normal on each day of the week for the principal provinces of India:

Rain.—During the week under review most of the rainfall recorded has been received in North-Eastern India and in the west of the Peninsula. Scattered showers have been received over the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, Sind, and the south of the Carnatic ; but the amounts were small, and the only effective rainfall is reported from the two regions noticed above. Of the fifty-one rainfall divisions, fourteen divisions received effective rainfall, and eleven more received some rain, though the average actual rainfall of each division was less than one-tenth of an inch, while twenty-six divisions received absolutely no rain. The regions which received effective rainfall included the following divisions :—East, Deltaic, Central, and North Bengal, both the Assam divisions, the north-west of the Punjab, Malabar, Madras (South-Central and South), Coorg, Mysore, the Konkan, and the Bombay Deccan. In all other parts of India the rainfall of the week was practically or absolutely nil. The heaviest actual average rainfall for any division was 2·01 inches in the Surma division of Assam. This was followed by 0·88 inch in the Brahmaputra division, by 0·81 inch in North Bengal, by 0·74 inch in Malabar, by 0·58 inch in Madras (South-Central), and by 0·50 inch in Deltaic Bengal. The third column of the table shows that of the twenty-five divisions which received some rain, only six had more than the average normal rainfall of the week. These six divisions were Deltaic and North Bengal, Malabar, the Konkan, the Bombay Deccan, and the East Coast (Central division). The excess in all cases was small. In all other parts of India the rainfall was less than usual, but in most divisions the anticipated rainfall of the week under review is small, and hence the deficiency is generally unimportant. In Assam however, and also in the hills and north-west divisions of the Punjab, the rainfall is ordinarily moderately heavy, and the deficiency in them is largish.

The three concluding columns of the table show that the seasonal rainfall exhibits the same general features as in the last two or three weeks, there being a more or less large excess in all divisions, except the Burma divisions, the Assam divisions, North Behar, the submontane division of the North-Western Provinces, the South, Hill and North-West divisions of the Punjab, Guzerat, Kathiawar, Sind, and West Rajputana, where the rainfall between February 26th and April 15th has been normal or short of the average. In the Peninsula and the central parts of the country the excess has been large.

The following gives the largest total amounts received during the week as reported in the rainfall telegrams of the week :

CHIEF COMMISSIONER OF AJMERE-MERWARA.

NOTIFICATION.

Abu, the 18th April, 1893.

No. 413.—The following draft of rules under the Indian Factories Act (Act XV of 1881 as amended by Act XI of 1891) is published under section 18 (1) for the information of the persons interested, and notice is hereby given that the draft will be taken into consideration by the Chief Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara on the expiration of two months from the date of the publication of this notification :—

Rule 1. The terms "Factory," "child," "mill-gearing," and "employed," when used in these rules, shall have the meaning given to them in the Act.

2. The Assistant Commissioners of Ajmere and Merwara for the time being are hereby appointed "Inspectors" under section 3 of the Act within the local limits of their respective jurisdictions. The District Superintendent of Police for the time being is hereby appointed "Joint Inspector" throughout Ajmere-Merwara. The Inspectors shall be officially subordinate to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara; and the "Joint Inspector" shall be officially subordinate to each Inspector so far as his district is concerned.

3. Each Inspector shall keep a register of all factories within his jurisdiction in the Form A attached to these rules, and a permanent serial number shall be given to each factory.

4. Each Inspector shall inspect factories within his jurisdiction not less than twice a year and satisfy himself that the provisions of the Act are duly observed.

5. An Inspector may enter any factory for the purposes of section 4 of the Act at any time during the day, provided that he shall, in order to verify registers kept under section 9 of the Act examine the children employed in working hours.

6. The Magistrate of the district or Inspector shall send through the post, under registered cover, a notice to the occupier of any factory which he may consider as coming within the purview of the Act, intimating his intention of placing the factory upon his register.

7. Any person served with a notice under the preceding rule, whose premises do not, in his opinion, fall within the definition of "Factory" given in the Act, may, within 15 days of the receipt of such notice, forward to the Magistrate of the district a statement setting forth his objections to the registration of the premises as a factory. The District Magistrate shall consider and dispose of such objections according to law, after making such inquiry as he may deem necessary, and intimate his decision to all concerned.

8. When any premises ceased to be occupied as a factory, the occupier may give notice of the fact to the Inspector of the district, who shall, if satisfied that the Act is no longer applicable to such premises, remove them from his register of factories, and intimate the fact of his having done so to the "Joint Inspector."

9. Each Inspector and "Joint Inspector" shall keep a register of inspection in Form B attached to these rules, in which shall be recorded all orders or remarks passed by him at each inspection.

10. Each Inspector shall at once forward a copy of his inspection memorandum to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara, and also to the occupier of the factory inspected. The despatch through the post under a registered cover of a copy of the inspection memorandum shall be deemed to be sufficient service on the occupier of the factory of any orders or directions therein contained. The "Joint Inspector" shall forward copy of his inspection memorandum through the Inspector of the district to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara.

11. Under section 5 of the Act, the Civil Surgeon of Ajmere is hereby appointed to be the certifying surgeon for the district of Ajmere; and the Assistant Surgeon of Beawar is appointed to be the certifying surgeon for the district of Merwara.

12. It shall be the duty of each certifying surgeon of the district to certify, in Form C attached to these rules, the age of any person employed or desirous of being employed in a factory when called upon to do so under section 5 of the Act. A fee of 4 annas shall be the fee payable to a certifying surgeon by or on behalf of the person to be examined for examining him and granting him a certificate in the said form. The Inspector of each district shall provide the certifying surgeon of his district with blank forms of such certificate.

13. Every occupier of a factory shall keep a file of all certificates of certifying surgeons relating to children in his employ, and shall produce it when required by the Inspector or "Joint Inspector." Every such certificate shall be returned by such occupier to the parent or guardian of the person to whom it relates on his leaving the factory for other employ, and on demand of such parent or guardian, and on receipt of the cost of such certificate, if such cost was originally paid by the occupier.

14. Every occupier of a factory shall keep a monthly register in Form D attached to these rules, and no such register shall be destroyed or removed from the factory without the written permission of the Inspector of the district.

15. The occupier of the factory shall, if required by the Inspector or "Joint Inspector," bring before him, on the occasion of any inspection, all children employed in the factory and any other persons in the service of such occupier whom the Inspecting Officer may wish to see; also all

NOTIFICATION.

Abu, the 18th April, 1893.

No. 413.—The following draft of rules under the Indian Factories Act (Act XV of 1881 as amended by Act XI of 1891) is published under section 18 (1) for the information of the persons interested, and notice is hereby given that the draft will be taken into consideration by the Chief Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara on the expiration of two months from the date of the publication of this notification :—

Rule 1. The terms "Factory," "child," "mill-gearing," and "employed," when used in these rules, shall have the meaning given to them in the Act.

2. The Assistant Commissioners of Ajmere and Merwara for the time being are hereby appointed "Inspectors" under section 3 of the Act within the local limits of their respective jurisdictions. The District Superintendent of Police for the time being is hereby appointed "Joint Inspector" throughout Ajmere-Merwara. The Inspectors shall be officially subordinate to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara; and the "Joint Inspector" shall be officially subordinate to each Inspector so far as his district is concerned.

3. Each Inspector shall keep a register of all factories within his jurisdiction in the Form A attached to these rules, and a permanent serial number shall be given to each factory.

4. Each Inspector shall inspect factories within his jurisdiction not less than twice a year and satisfy himself that the provisions of the Act are duly observed.

5. An Inspector may enter any factory for the purposes of section 4 of the Act at any time during the day, provided that he shall, in order to verify registers kept under section 9 of the Act examine the children employed in working hours.

6. The Magistrate of the district or Inspector shall send through the post, under registered cover, a notice to the occupier of any factory which he may consider as coming within the purview of the Act, intimating his intention of placing the factory upon his register.

7. Any person served with a notice under the preceding rule, whose premises do not, in his opinion, fall within the definition of "Factory" given in the Act, may, within 15 days of the receipt of such notice, forward to the Magistrate of the district a statement setting forth his objections to the registration of the premises as a factory. The District Magistrate shall consider and dispose of such objections according to law, after making such inquiry as he may deem necessary, and intimate his decision to all concerned.

8. When any premises ceased to be occupied as a factory, the occupier may give notice of the fact to the Inspector of the district, who shall, if satisfied that the Act is no longer applicable to such premises, remove them from his register of factories, and intimate the fact of his having done so to the "Joint Inspector."

9. Each Inspector and "Joint Inspector" shall keep a register of inspection in Form B attached to these rules, in which shall be recorded all orders or remarks passed by him at each inspection.

10. Each Inspector shall at once forward a copy of his inspection memorandum to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara, and also to the occupier of the factory inspected. The despatch through the post under a registered cover of a copy of the inspection memorandum shall be deemed to be sufficient service on the occupier of the factory of any orders or directions therein contained. The "Joint Inspector" shall forward copy of his inspection memorandum through the Inspector of the district to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara.

11. Under section 5 of the Act, the Civil Surgeon of Ajmere is hereby appointed to be the certifying surgeon for the district of Ajmere; and the Assistant Surgeon of Beawar is appointed to be the certifying surgeon for the district of Merwara.

12. It shall be the duty of each certifying surgeon of the district to certify, in Form C attached to these rules, the age of any person employed or desirous of being employed in a factory when called upon to do so under section 5 of the Act. A fee of 4 annas shall be the fee payable to a certifying surgeon by or on behalf of the person to be examined for examining him and granting him a certificate in the said form. The Inspector of each district shall provide the certifying surgeon of his district with blank forms of such certificate.

13. Every occupier of a factory shall keep a file of all certificates of certifying surgeons relating to children in his employ, and shall produce it when required by the Inspector or "Joint Inspector." Every such certificate shall be returned by such occupier to the parent or guardian of the person to whom it relates on his leaving the factory for other employ, and on demand of such parent or guardian, and on receipt of the cost of such certificate, if such cost was originally paid by the occupier.

14. Every occupier of a factory shall keep a monthly register in Form D attached to these rules, and no such register shall be destroyed or removed from the factory without the written permission of the Inspector of the district.

15. The occupier of the factory shall, if required by the Inspector or "Joint Inspector," bring before him, on the occasion of any inspection, all children employed in the factory and any other persons in the service of such occupier whom the Inspecting Officer may wish to see; also all registers, certificates, and notices required by the Act or any rule made thereunder to be kept or issued by such occupier or in the factory.

16. Notice in writing of all accidents resulting in death, or from which the injury is evidently so severe that there is no reasonable hope that the injured person will be able to return to his work within 48 hours, shall be given on the same day on which the accident occurs. Notice of accidents of a less severe character, but which nevertheless prevent the person injured from returning to his work within 48 hours of their occurrence, shall be given immediately on the expiry of the 48 hours' interval allowed by section 13 of the Act. All notices of accidents shall be in Form E, and shall contain the name of the person or persons injured and full information as to the nature and cause of the accident, and shall be sent by special messenger to each of the following officers namely:—

(a) Inspector of the district;
(c) The officer in charge of the nearest police-station.

17. Every order for the fencing of any part of the machinery or mill-gearing of a factory, which the District Magistrate or Inspector may pass under section 12 (c) of the Act, shall state clearly what is required, so that the said machinery or gearing may be securely fenced, and shall specify a reasonable time within which what is required to be done shall be completed, and it shall further give notice that if it shall not be so completed, the person responsible for the breach of the order will be prosecuted under section 15 of the Act.

18. Every occupier of a factory shall set up and maintain in a conspicuous place in the factory a printed or written notice in English, Urdu, and Hindi of the daily working hours of the factory in Form F annexed.

19. Appeals from the orders of Inspectors under the Act shall lie to the Commissioner of Ajmere-Merwara.

20. Appeals should be in the form of a memorandum of appeal, similar to that contained in the fourth schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure No. 173, and the stamp fee for such appeal should be regulated according to the provisions of Article 11, Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act or such provisions as may for the time be in force.

21. If the order of an Inspector is set aside or modified in appeal, the Inspector shall, as early as possible, deliver to the occupant of the factory such amended orders as may be in conformity with the orders of the Commissioner.

22. In every factory a supply of pure potable water from one or other of the following sources shall be provided:—

(a) from a general Municipal water service;
(b) from one or more wells or reservoirs so situated as not to be liable to be polluted or contaminated with organic matter or other impurities.

23. When taps are not used, a suitable establishment must be maintained for the drawing, protection, and distribution of the water.

24. Proper arrangements must be made for maintaining in drained and cleanly condition the area around the spot set apart for the distribution of the water.

25. Every occupier of a factory shall, on every day on which work is carried on in the factory he occupies, have available at the said factory for the use of the persons employed therein, free of cost to them, a water-supply consisting of at least twice as many gallons of water as there are persons employed in the factory. Of the whole supply at least as many gallons as there are persons employed in the factory shall be fit for potable purposes, and the remainder shall be fit for purposes of washing.

26. All the inside walls of the rooms of every factory and all the ceilings or tops of such rooms (whether such walls, ceilings, or tops be plastered or not) and all the passages and staircases of every factory, if they have not been painted with oil or varnished once at least within seven years, shall be limewashed by the occupier of the factory once at least within every 14 months to date from the period when last limewashed, and, if they have been so painted or varnished, shall be washed by the said occupier with hot water and soap once at least within 14 months to date from the period when last washed.

27. The floors of factories shall be swept at least once a week or oftener if to do so is necessary to maintain them in a cleanly condition.

28. The minimum space provided for each person employed in any room of a factory shall be 36 superficial feet, 500 cubic feet, and 10 square feet of lateral ventilating opening. Provided that in cases in which lateral ventilation cannot be contrived on account of the nature of the industry carried on in such room, sufficient interchange of fresh air shall be ensured by forced ventilation or other means as the Inspector may deem sufficient, or if this cannot be managed, a minimum of 54 superficial feet and 900 cubic feet shall be provided for each person employed.

Provided also that subject to the control of the Commissioner, the Inspector may, for reasons to be recorded in writing, relax the conditions of this rule where in his opinion this may be done with due regard to the health of the factory hands employed in any particular room or rooms of a factory.

29. All drains carrying waste or sullage water shall be constructed in masonry or other impermeable material, and shall be regularly flushed and connected with some recognised drainage line.

30. The compound surrounding every factory shall be maintained in a strictly sanitary and cleanly condition.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

[Revised Advertisement.]

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage, in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets, etc. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F and half of G; Volume IV, latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O; Vol. VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol. VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and, as such, will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

REVENUE AND AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, April 22nd, 1893.

During the early part of the week under review, the weather, with the exception of a few showers in the extreme north-west and extreme north-east, was generally fine throughout India. Pressure was highest over Guzerat and the west of the Peninsula and low over Behar and the east of the North-Western and Central Provinces, but the pressure differences were small. At the close of the week, however, the area of lowest pressure was transferred from North-Eastern to North-Western India; hence easterly winds blew up the Gangetic plain, and showers fell over a considerable part of Northern India. Over the Peninsula the weather was generally fine, but on the 19th and 20th a slight depression was shown in the extreme south. This was accompanied with very heavy rain in Ceylon, and was followed by thunderstorms in Malabar and South Madras. Normal hot weather temperature conditions have prevailed generally, the variations of the mean temperature from the normal having been much smaller than of late, and the variation for the whole week for the whole of India being only +0 4°.

On Sunday, the 16th, pressure was highest over Guzerat and Kathiawar and low over Behar and the east of the North-Western and Central Provinces. The pressure differences were small, but the winds were fresh to strong in several places. The directions were north-westerly and northerly over North-Western India and the Gangetic plain, westerly over the Peninsula, and southerly over the Bay and Lower Bengal. Light showers had fallen over Baluchistan, Sind, the North Konkan, and the Assam Valley, and locally in a few other places. On the 17th the barometer was falling almost everywhere, but the general distribution and the winds were unaltered. Rain in small amounts had fallen over the north of the Punjab, over Baluchistan, at Surat, and at several north-eastern stations.

On the 18th the barometer was still falling everywhere. The relative positions of the areas of highest and of lowest pressure were unaltered, but, except at the head of the Bay and in Lower Bengal, where strong southerly to south-westerly winds prevailed, the wind directions were more variable. Light rain continued to fall in the extreme north-east of India, while local showers were reported from Colombo, Cochin, Lahore, and Murree. On the 19th the barometer was falling over the Punjab and Rajputana, while it was rising elsewhere. Hence, though the general distribution of pressure was similar to that reported on the preceding days, i.e., the highest pressures lay over Guzerat and the lowest over Behar, a disposition to change was observable, and readings were nearly as low in Rajputana as in Behar. Also a small local depression had appeared over the extreme south of the Peninsula. The wind directions were generally fairly normal, while the force remained fresh in several parts of the country and was strong at the head of the Bay. Light showers had fallen during thunderstorms over the west of the Peninsula, over the North-Western Himalayas, and over Assam. The barometric changes reported on the 20th were generally small, and there was very little alteration either in pressure or winds. The thundershowers had ceased over the west of the Peninsula, but continued over the North-Western Himalayas and over Assam. On the 21st pressure was nearly steady over Burma and the Peninsula, but was falling elsewhere. The fall had been brisk over North-Western India, and the transference of the area of lowest pressure to that region had taken place. The winds were irregularly cyclonic over North-Western India, variable over the Gangetic plain, and westerly to southerly elsewhere Thundershowers had occurred over the North-Western Himalayas, the North-Western Provinces, and Assam, the amounts being somewhat larger than of late. On the 21st the barometer was rising over the Gangetic plain and Bengal, but was falling elsewhere. The low pressure area in the north-west had become more marked and gradients over Guzerat and the head of the Peninsula were steep. Pressure was highest in Malabar and Tenasserim. Easterly breezes were appearing over Northern India, and the weather was more unsettled. Moderate to heavy thunderstorms had occurred over North-Eastern India, and light thundershowers over the North-Western Provinces and the neighbouring districts. Thundershowers had also occurred over the centre and south-west of the Peninsula.

Mean for whole India .	+1·5	+0·6	—0·2	—0·1	+0·1	+0·3	+0·3	+0·4

On the first day of the week there was a considerable excess of temperature over North-Western and Central India. On the 17th the area of this excess though still considerable, had diminished, but on the 18th temperature fell over a large part of the country, and from that date until the close of the week the variations of the mean temperature from the normal average were small in most provinces. The mean variation for the whole of India for the week was only +0·4°.

Rain.—The past week has been marked by very general rain accompanying the numerous thunderstorms which have prevailed over the country. In the great majority of cases, however, the rainfall has been light, the average actual fall of the different divisions being in many instances less than one-tenth of an inch. Of the fifty-one rainfall divisions, twelve received during the week absolutely no rain, twenty-four received some rain, but with rain so light or so partial that the average for each division was less than one-tenth of an inch, while fifteen received effective rainfall, i.e., an average fall of over one-tenth of an inch in each division. The regions which received effective rainfall included the following divisions:—Eastern, Deltaic, and Northern Bengal, both the Assam Divisions, the hill and north-western districts of the Punjab, Malabar, Madras (South-Central and Central), Coorg, Mysore, the Bombay Deccan, Sind, and West Rajputana. The heaviest average actual fall was in Assam (Surma Division), and amounted to 9·26 inches; this was followed by 3·74 in the Assam Valley, by 0·61 inch in Eastern Bengal, and by 0·50 inch in Northern Bengal. The regions which had absolutely no rain included the Burma Divisions, except Upper Burma, Khandeish, Berar, the Central Provinces (West), Kathiawar, Central India (West), and the East Coast Divisions.

The third column of the concluding table shows that the rainfall of the week has been largely in excess in the Surma Division of Assam, considerably in excess in the Brahmaputra Division, and slightly in excess in the Oudh Divisions, in the submontane division of the North-Western Provinces, in the Hill Division of the Punjab, in Mysore, in the Konkan, in the Bombay-Deccan, in Guzerat, in Sind, in Rajputana (West), and in Madras (Central). The only case of considerable deficiency is in Tenasserim, where no rain has been received, while the normal average of the week is 1·08 inch.

The rainfall of the past week has not made any material change in the condition of the seasonal rainfall, except in the case of the Assam Divisions. In these divisions at the close of last week there was considerable deficiency, but the heavy rainfall of the week under review has raised the actual total for the season, so that it now about equals the normal. There is a very large excess over the central parts of the country and the Peninsula.

Divisions.	Districts.	Stations.	Amount.
Eastern Bengal	Mymensingh	Netrakona	2·02 inches.

Weekly Report on the state of the Season and Prospects of the Crops.

Madras.—For week ending 22nd April.—Moderate showers in Nilgiris and in parts of the Central and West Coast districts and scattered showers in other parts, except the Carnatic. Cultivation proceeding on West Coast and to a limited extent elsewhere. Standing crops under wells and large irrigation works generally fair, but rain wanted for recent sowings in Southern districts. Harvest still going on in parts with fair outturn. Pasture and fodder generally sufficient. Prices slightly easier in Nilgiris, West Coast, and Central districts, rather dearer in the Circars and Southern districts, and stationary elsewhere.

Bombay.—For week ending 26th April.—Rain in parts of eleven districts. Standing crops damaged by rain, rats, or blight in parts of three districts; otherwise good. Reaping of late crops nearly completed in seven districts, and progressing in six others. Preparations for next season continue in fourteen and cotton picking in six districts. Prices steady. Agricultural stock good and fodder sufficient.

Bengal.—For week ending 22nd April.—Light rain fell during the week in North and East Bengal; practically no rain elsewhere. Generally agricultural prospects continue favourable. The spring harvest is nearly finished, and the outturn, taking the Province as a whole, is estimated at not less than fourteen annas of an average crop. Poppy and tobacco are estimated to be not less than twelve annas. Spring rice is being harvested, and promises well. Ploughing continues, and the autumn rice, jute, and millets are being sown. Sugarcane and indigo prospects are good. Mahua (Bassia latifolia) is being gathered with good results. Mangoes are deficient. Prices of common rice remain almost stationary. Fodder and water supplies are generally plentiful, except in Palamau and parts of Hooghly. Condition of cattle generally good.

North-Western Provinces and Oudh.—For week ending 26th April.—Weather somewhat unsettled during the week, with slight showers and thunderstorms in places. Harvesting of spring crops almost completed; threshing and winnowing in progress. Outturn generally good. Irrigation of summer crops going on. Opium weighments commenced. Prices fairly steady.

Punjab.—For week ending 26th April.—Slight rain has fallen in all but three districts. Reaping and threshing of spring crops in progress. Condition of standing crops is generally good. Cattle generally in good condition. Fodder sufficient throughout the Province. Prices falling in six districts, rising in two others, and stationary elsewhere.

Central Provinces.—For week ending 26th April.—Weather stormy with slight showers of rain in eight districts. Threshing and winnowing of winter crops progressing. Fodder insufficient in one district and in part of another. Prices falling in one district; elsewhere stationary.

Burma.—For week ending 22nd April.—In Upper Burma planting of dry-weather paddy continues, while in Mandalay and Sagaing the crop is being reaped. Peas are being reaped in Myingyan and beans in Lower Chindwin. Crops are generally good, but in the Pagan sub-division of the Myingyan district the crops have failed in most places. Rain is needed in parts of Bhamo, and water is wanted in parts of Kyaukse. In Lower Burma the price of paddy has risen slightly in Amherst; elsewhere prices are almost stationary. In Upper Burma there have been slight increases in two districts and slight decreases in two others. Number on relief works in Meiktila not reported.

Assam.—For week ending 25th April.—Weather seasonable. Sowing of early rice continues. Prospects good. Condition of cattle fair. Fodder and water sufficient.

Mysore and Coorg.—For week ending 26th April.—MYSORE: Rainfall general and good in the Mysore district. Standing crops have been benefited, but more rain is required in parts of five districts. Prospects generally favourable. Prices fallen in one district.

COORG.—Rainfall moderate. Prospects of coffee and cardamom crops fair. Prices stationary. Water and fodder for cattle sufficient.

Berar and Hyderabad.—For week ending 26th April.—BERAR: Weather hot. Harvesting of spring crops almost completed. Preparation of land for ensuing season continues. Fodder and water sufficient. Cattle generally healthy. Prices almost steady.

HYDERABAD: Slight rain during the week. Harvesting of hot-weather crops continues. Prices fairly steady.

Central India.—For week ending 26th April.—Rain in four Agencies and Neemuch. Wheat being threshed in Bhopal and gathered in other parts; probable outturn fair, except in two Agencies and in Neemuch. Agricultural stock generally in good condition. Prices rising in the Neemuch district, falling slightly in Bhopal, and steady elsewhere. Poppy in flower in parts of Gwalior. Opium collected in three Agencies; outturn fair.

Rajputana.—For week ending 26th April.—Rainfall slight in parts. Agricultural operations satisfactory. Cutting of crops going on. Harvest prospects good, except in Jhallawar, where wheat is reported below average. Agricultural stock generally good. Pasturage or fodder sufficient, except in two States, where fodder is reported scarce. Prices rising in two States, falling in five others, and steady elsewhere.

Nepal.—For week ending 22nd April.—Weather showery and cool. Prospects good.

5. Copies of examination papers are not procurable except those that are issued for examination. These need not be returned.

6. Each examination is complete in itself. A candidate who has failed in an examination, and presents himself for examination on a subsequent occasion, must undergo the full examination and furnish a fresh fee and certificates.

REVENUE DEPARTMENT.

[Revised Advertisement.]

A Dictionary of the Economic Products of India.

BY DR. GEO. WATT, C.I.E.,

Reporter on Economic Products.

Published under the authority of the Government of India in the Revenue and Agricultural Department.

The first five volumes and Volume VI, Part I, of the Dictionary are now ready at the Office of Superintendent of Government Printing, No. 8, Hastings Street, Calcutta, and will be supplied to non-subscribers on receipt of the price for the complete set, which is R45 in India, and 3 guineas in England (exclusive of the Index, for which a separate charge will be made): packing and postage, in India, 8 annas per volume; for England, 2 rupees 6 annas per volume. For copies bound in half calf or half morocco, R6 and 8 shillings respectively will be charged extra for the whole set.

The Dictionary is intended to deal with the products of India—animal, vegetable, and mineral; each product being treated after a uniform plan, the paragraphs of which give the scientific, vernacular, and European names; habitat or source; history; properties and uses (both chemical and industrial); trade statistics; markets, etc. The work is arranged alphabetically according to scientific nomenclature, but commercial and important vernacular names are also given as cross references, so that little difficulty need be experienced in finding the account of a product even when its scientific name is unknown to the reader.

An important feature of the Dictionary consists in the fact that derived information is in every instance given under quotation marks, and with a reference to the original publication. Numerous contributors have, however, furnished the results of new discoveries, and confirmed the vernacular names, so that the Dictionary is not only a complete compilation of published information, but has been brought abreast of the most recent inventions and discoveries.

Volume I contains the letters A and B, and consists of 559 royal octavo pages; Volume II embraces the letter C in 689 pages; Volume III contains the letters D, E, F, and half of G; Volume IV, latter half of G to middle of L, and Volume V contains the latter half of L to end of O; Vol. VI, (which will consist of four parts) Part I contains letters P to R. The whole work will, it is expected, be completed in nine volumes (including Parts II to IV of Vol. VI) during the current year, but a tenth volume may also be issued, consisting of an Index to all the vernacular and other names contained in the Dictionary. The Index will practically be a glossary of the vernacular and European names of the plants, animals, and minerals of India, and, as such, will be a work of reference, which, it is hoped, may prove of considerable value.

Weather Review of India for the week ending at 8 a.m. on Saturday, April 29th, 1893.

The unsettled weather which had commenced over India at the close of the preceding week continued and intensified during the week under review. In Northern India the weather was affected by a low pressure area, which appeared first in the extreme north-west, and then drifted slowly eastward down the Gangetic plain. It was accompanied with easterly winds up the Gangetic plain, and with showery weather over Central and North-Eastern India. Over the Eastern Peninsula the weather was affected by a small cyclonic storm. The first indications of this storm were given by the winds over the Bay on the morning of the 25th. On the 26th rain and strong easterly winds were reported in Lower Burma, and on the 27th the storm lay between Bassein and Rangoon. Heavy rain fell over Lower Burma. Over the Indian Peninsula more or less unsettled conditions have also prevailed, more particularly during the latter half of the week, when thundershowers were very prevalent. Due to this showery and unsettled weather there had occurred a fall of temperature, so that, while the mean temperature of the whole of India for the preceding week had been 0·4° above the normal, the mean temperature of the present week was 1·0° below the normal.

The chart of Sunday, the 23rd, showed a large low pressure area over the western desert, while readings were relatively high in Malabar and the south of the Bay, and highest in the Assam Valley. Pressure differences were, however, small or moderate. An abnormal easterly current prevailed up the Gangetic plain, but elsewhere the directions were fairly normal. Rain had fallen during dust and thunder storms over Assam, Bengal, at several central stations, and at a few places on the East Coast of the Peninsula. On the 24th pressure was rising everywhere. Gradients had become somewhat steeper over the Gangetic plain, but in other respects the general distribution was similar to that reported on the previous day The winds were also little changed. Numerous thunderstorms had given rain to Burma, Assam, Bengal, and the central stations. Darjeeling and Balasore received over 2 inches, and Colombo about 1½ inch On the 25th the low pressure area over North-Western India commenced to intensify and to move to the eastward. Otherwise there was again but little change to record in the general distribution. The pressure differences were larger than usual over a large part of the country. The winds were cyclonic over North-Western India, westerly and south-westerly across the Peninsula and the central parts of the country, and south-easterly to easterly over Northern India. At Diamond Island the wind had shifted to east. Rain had almost ceased in Bengal, but over a large part of Burma and of Assam, as well as around the head of the Bay and at a few stations in the south of the Peninsula, in the Central Provinces, and in North-Western India, showers had fallen. The chart of the next day, the 26th, showed a general barometric fall. The depression over North-Western India had moved very little, and there was again very little change to record in the general distribution. The winds were similar to those recorded on the preceding day. At Diamond Island the force had increased considerably, and pointed to the existence of a depression over the east of the Bay. The wind was strong in force over a large part of the country Rain had fallen fairly generally over the south of the Peninsula and over Burma, and showers were reported from other parts of the country. The amounts were generally moderate or small. On the morning of the 27th the depression over North-Western India had commenced to move decidedly in an easterly direction, the centre being near Agra. The barometer had consequently fallen over the Gangetic plain and North-Eastern India, while it had risen over North-Western India. At the same time a small storm had passed from the Bay into Burma, the centre lying between Bassein and Rangoon Pressure was highest in Malabar. The barometer read everywhere—but particularly in the neighbourhood of the low pressure areas noticed above,—largely below the normal average, and gradients in several part of the country were steep. Strong cyclonic winds prevailed over Lower Burma. Elsewhere the winds were similar to those reported on the previous day. Rain had fallen over Burma, Bengal, the north of the Gangetic plain, and a large part of the Peninsula. The amounts were large in Lower Burma and considerable in parts of Bengal. By the morning of the 28th the depression from North-Western India had reached West Bengal, while the depression over Lower Burma had disappeared. Readings were highest in Malabar and lowest in the neighbourhood of Allahabad, the pressure differences being considerable. Winds were variable over Northern India and Burma, westerly over the Peninsula and the central parts of the country, and southerly in Bengal. The distribution of rain was the same as on the preceding day, but the amounts were smaller. On the 29th the barometer was falling over North-Western India and rising elsewhere. Readings were lowest over the Gangetic plain and along the foot of the North-Western Himalayas and over West Bengal, and were highest over the south-east of the Bay. The wind directions were fairly normal, but the force was higher than usual. Rain was falling generally over Burma, Assam, and Bengal.

Temperature.—The following table shows the variations of the mean temperature from the normal on each day of the week for the principal provinces of India :

Province.	April.							Mean variation of week.

The above table shows that for the whole of India the mean temperature of the week was 1·0° below the normal average, and that on all days of the week the mean temperature of the whole country was lower than usual. The abnormal deficiency was less than 1·0° on the 23rd, 25th, 26th, and 27th, but amounted to 1·4° on the 28th and to 2·3° on the 29th. The mean temperature of Sind and Rajputana was excessive throughout almost the whole week, and that of Central India and of the Punjab during the middle of the week, but in all the other provinces the mean temperature was almost uninterruptedly below the normal.

Rain.—As shown in the earlier paragraphs of the summary, the weather has been very unsettled throughout the greater part of the Indian region during the week under review. Numerous thunderstorms have given very general rain to the greater part of India, and the cyclonic storm which passed from the Bay into Burma gave heavy rain to a large part of that province.

Of the fifty-one rainfall divisions, only eight had absolutely no rain during the week, eight more received only slight rain, the average actual fall of each division being less than one-tenth of an inch; while the remaining thirty-five divisions received effective rainfall, the average actual fall ranging from 6·96 inches in Tenasserim to 0·10 inch in the Konkan and Berar The regions which received actually or practically no rain included the following divisions:—The North-Western Provinces (East, Central, and West), Oudh (South), the Punjab (South, Central, and West), Coorg, the Central Provinces (Central), Guzerat, Kathiawar, Sind, the Central India, and Rajputana divisions, and Hyderabad (south). The heaviest rainfall, attributable to the cyclone which entered Lower Burma on the 27th, was 6·96 inches in Tenasserim; this was followed by 5·27 inches in Lower Burma; by 3·74 inches in North Bengal; by 3·15 inches in the Surma division of Assam, and by 2·12 inches in the Brahmaputra division The heaviest rainfall during the week under review is ordinarily in Assam and North Bengal, so that the heavy falls reported in Burma are exceptional. The third column of the table at the close of the summary shows that over the greater part of the country the rainfall of the week was excessive. The only regions where the fall was lighter than usual were the two Assam divisions, the North-Western Provinces (East), and Oudh (South), the Punjab (South and West), Coorg, Sind, the two Rajputana divisions, and Hyderabad (South), and in nearly all these divisions the deficiency was unimportant. On the other hand, over a large part of North-Eastern India the excess was large, and in some parts of the Peninsula it was considerable. Thus in Tenasserim the average normal rainfall of the week is only 0·67 inches, while the average actual was 6·96 inches; in Lower Burma the normal is only 0·30 inch, while the actual is 5 27 inches, and in North Bengal the normal is 1·68, while the actual was 3·74 inches.

With regard to the seasonal rainfall, the most important change which has occurred during the present week is the excess which has appeared in Burma. Hitherto there has been a considerable deficiency over that province, but with the heavy rain of the past week that has been changed, and, except in Arakan, there is now a large excess. In all places, except the extreme north-west (where there is an unimportant deficiency), the rainfall of the season—February 26th to April 29th—has been good and sufficient, and in some divisions has been very heavy.

The following gives the largest total amounts received during the week as reported in the rainfall telegrams of the week:

Weekly Report on the state of the Season and Prospects of the Crops.

Madras.—For week ending 29th April.—Heavy rain in two Northern districts and in parts of the Central and Southern districts and Nilgiris. Showers over rest of Presidency, but scattered in the Deccan and Carnatic. Cultivation commenced in many parts, and some sowings are in progress. Standing crops generally fair, but more rain is needed in parts of Southern districts. Fodder and water generally sufficient and condition of cattle good. Prices almost unaltered, though slightly easier in the Central districts.

Bombay.—For week ending 3rd May.—Rain in parts of ten districts. Standing crops damaged in parts of two districts ; otherwise good. Cotton picking and reaping of late-crops progressing in several districts. Preparations for next season continue generally. Prices steady. Agricultural stock good and fodder sufficient.

Bengal.—For week ending 29th April.—There was rain in all districts during the week due to thunderstorms, the falls being heavier in North and East Bengal than elsewhere. Standing crops were benefited, and ploughing and early sowings facilitated. Autumn rice and jute are doing well. Prospects of young sugarcane and indigo are also favourable. Spring rice is being harvested. The spring and opium harvests are practically over. No marked fluctuation in prices. Supplies of fodder and water are sufficient, except in parts of Hooghly. Cattle are generally reported healthy.

North-Western Provinces and Oudh.—For week ending 3rd May.—Weather unsettled in the Central and sub-montane districts, where rain has fallen. Harvesting of spring crops nearly completed ; outturn good. Irrigation of sugarcane and extra crops in progress. Supplies ample. Prices generally steady.

Punjab.—For week ending 3rd May.—Rain has fallen in three districts. Cutting and threshing of spring crops in progress. Condition of standing crops is generally good and autumn prospects fair. The gram crop is somewhat damaged by insects in part of the Amritsar district. Cattle generally in good condition. Fodder sufficient throughout the Province. Poppy prospects good. Prices falling in seven and stationary in six districts.

Central Provinces.—For week ending 3rd May.—Weather hot and occasionally cloudy. Threshing and winnowing of winter crops progressing in nine districts. Land being prepared for autumn sowings. Fodder insufficient in some districts. Prices risen in one district and fallen in another.

Burma.—For week ending 29th April.—Rain has fallen throughout Upper and Lower Burma. In Upper Burma reaping of dry-weather paddy has commenced. Peas are being reaped in Myingyan. Standing crops are reported everywhere to be good, except in part of Bhamo, where owing to ravages by insects the crops have been slightly damaged. In Lower Burma the price of paddy has remained stationary, but in Upper Burma it has risen slightly in Mandalay and fallen slightly in Minbu ; elsewhere prices are unchanged. Number on relief works in Meiktila not reported.

Assam.—For week ending 2nd May.—Weather seasonable. Sowing of summer paddy continues. Condition of cattle fair. Fodder and water sufficient.

Mysore and Coorg.—For week ending 3rd May.—MYSORE: Rain reported throughout the State. Crops and prospects good. Prices fallen in two districts and risen slightly in two others.

COORG.—Insufficient rain has affected prospects of coffee. In North Coorg the blossom is only partial, and generally the crop will be below the average. Cardamom crop fair. Fodder and water for cattle sufficient. Prices stationary.

Berar and Hyderabad.—For week ending 3rd May.—BERAR: Rainfall fair. Weather hot. Harvesting of spring crops nearing completion. Preparation of land for ensuing season in progress. Fodder and water sufficient. Cattle healthy. Prices almost steady.

HYDERABAD: Rainfall moderate during the week. Harvesting of hot-weather crops continues. Prices steady.

Central India.—For week ending 3rd May.—Rain during the week in Bhopal. Reaping nearly completed; probable outturn fair, except in two Agencies. Condition of standing crops generally fair. Agricultural stock good. Pasturage sufficient. Prices of food-grains falling in Goona and steady elsewhere. Condition of opium in Western Malwa good.

Rajputana.—For week ending 3rd May.—Agricultural operations satisfactory. Reaping of crops going on; harvest prospects good, except wheat, which is reported much below average in Harowti. Cattle generally good. Pasturage or fodder sufficient, except in parts of two States, where fodder is reported scarce. Prices rising in two States, falling in four others, and steady elsewhere.

Nepal.—For week ending 29th April.—Weather cool and showery with thunderstorms. Rice and Indian-corn are being sown. Prospects good.

2. The accounts of 1891-92 closed with a surplus of Rx. 467,535, being less by Rx. 3,220,636 than the surplus of Rx. 3,688,171 realised in 1890-91. The expenditure under the head Exchange was greater by Rx. 1,866,154 owing mainly to the fall in the average rate of exchange from 1*s.* 6·089*d.* in 1890-91 to 1*s.* 4·733*d.* in 1891-92: the restoration of the Famine Insurance Grant to the full amount of Rx. 1,500,000 involved an additional Imperial Expenditure of Rx. 655,912; and there was no special receipt in 1891-92 corresponding to the contribution of Rx. 490,000 from Provincial Revenues in 1890-91. There were other variations between the accounts of the two years both on the Revenue and Expenditure side, the net result being a decrease in net revenue of Rx. 208,570 in 1891-92 as compared with the previous year.

3. The Budget Estimates of 1891-92 anticipated a surplus of Rx. 115,600. Though the accounts show an improvement in the net result of Rx. 351,935 only, there are considerable variations in the details. The Revenue and Expenditure in India exceeded the Budget Estimates by Rx. 3,043,860 and Rx. 1,488,760 respectively, resulting in a net improvement of Rx. 1,555,100, of which Rx. 967,624 occurs in the Imperial section and Rx. 587,476 in the Provincial and Local section of the Accounts. The sterling expenditure was very slightly higher than the Budget Estimate, but there was an increase of £45,319 in the sterling receipts. On the other hand, there was an increase in the net charge under Exchange of Rx. 658,409.

4. Of the increase of Rx 3,043,860 in the Revenue in India, Rx. 2,064,189 occurred in Railway Revenue, which was especially large in 1891-92 in consequence chiefly of the exceptionally heavy exports of wheat and seeds. The Opium Revenue also exceeded the estimate by Rx. 418,980 owing to the higher prices realised at the sales of Bengal opium and to an increase in the exports of Malwa opium. The remainder of the increase, Rx. 560,691, is distributed as follows:

		Increase + Decrease — Rx.
Principal Heads of Revenue (excluding Opium) ...	+	171,869
Interest	+	30,888
Post Office, Telegraph, and Mint	+	112,543
Civil Department	+	84,719
Miscellaneous	+	53,892
Irrigation	+	111,440
Buildings and Roads	+	25,917
Army	—	30,577
TOTAL ...	+	560,691

There was a falling-off in Land Revenue of Rx. 433,526, caused mainly by the scarcity in Madras. The receipts from Forest Revenue and Provincial Rates were also slightly less than the Estimate, but there were increases under the other principal heads of Revenue, the more important being Salt Rx. 292,682, Stamps Rx. 113,956, and Excise Rx. 163,564.

In the group "Post Office, Telegraph, and Mint," the Telegraph Revenue exceeded the Budget Estimate by Rx. 146,342, the Post Office Revenue yielded a small improvement, but the Mint receipts were less than the Estimate in consequence of the coinage being below the average.

Under Irrigation the improvement in Direct Receipts from Major Works was Rx. 181,037, but there was a falling-off in the portion of Land Revenue due to Irrigation.

5. The increase of Rx. 1,488,760 in Expenditure in India is accounted for by excesses over the Budget Estimates of Rx. 1,175,562 in Military Expenditure and of Rx. 688,172 in the Railway Revenue Accounts. On the other hand, there was a saving of Rx. 413,128 in Opium Expenditure owing to the partial failure of the crop.

6. The improvement of Rx. 587,476 in the Provincial and Local sections is made up of an increase of Rx. 580,073 in Revenue and a reduction of Rx. 7,403 in Expenditure.

7. The increase in the Revenue in England of £45,319 includes £28,466 under Interest obtained by the investment of surplus cash balances, and £10,049 under "Miscellaneous" from some special receipts connected with the supply of stores to India.

8. While the total sterling expenditure did not differ appreciably from the Budget Estimate, there was an increase of £232,088 under Interest on Debt caused by the payment of discount on the 3 per cent. Stock issued during the year, and there were reductions of £102,087 and £140,737 respectively under Army and Special Defence Works, representing mainly postponements of expenditure to the following year.

9. The increase in the net charge under Exchange was Rx. 658,409. The fall in exchange from 1*s.* 5¼*d.* the rupee, the rate adopted for the Budget Estimates, to 1*s.* 4·733*d.*, the rate actually realised in the year, involved an additional charge of Rx. 675,165, which was reduced to the amount just mentioned by the reduction in the net sterling expenditure.

10. The following paragraphs notice in succession the several heads of Revenue and Expenditure :

PRINCIPAL HEADS OF REVENUE.

11. Land Revenue.—The collections of the year were less than those of the preceding year and than the Budget Estimate by Rx. 115,242 and Rx. 516,537 respectively. The scarcity in Madras during the year more than accounts for this reduction, the collections in that Presidency being Rx. 428,646 below those of 1890-91, and Rx. 556,367 below the Budget Estimate of 1891-92. In the North-Western Provinces the revenue was less than the Budget Estimate by Rx. 85,333, partly because settlement operations resulted in a reduction of the assessments in two districts, and partly because the arrears outstanding at the end of the year were larger than the Budget Estimates anticipated. In Upper Burma the collections fell short of the Estimate by Rx. 72,439 in consequence of scarcity and of the postponement of the payment of two lakhs of the rent of the Ruby Mines Company. In Bombay the collections were slightly less than the Budget Estimate. In the other Provinces the collections exceeded by moderate amounts the Budget Estimates of the year.

The collections of the past five official years (including Land Revenue due to Irrigation) and those of the last five Revenue years ending with 30th September are as follows :

	Year ending 31st March.	Year ending 30th September.
	Rx.	Rx.

1891-92	24,639,000	24,700,400

12. Opium.—The revenue from both Bengal and Malwa opium exceeded the Budget Estimates of the year and the actuals of the preceding year. A succession of poor crops necessitated the reduction of the quantity of Bengal opium to be offered for sale in 1892 to 54,000 chests; and the number of chests sold in 1891-92 was 56,250 against 57,000 in the preceding year, but an improvement in the average price from Rs. 1,037 to Rs. 1,058 a chest resulted in a slight increase in the Revenue from Bengal opium as compared with the year 1890-91 : in the Budget Estimate an average price per chest of Rs. 1,000 only was assumed. The weighments of Malwa opium for export were 31,236 chests in 1891-92 against 28,828 chests in 1890-91, and 29,100 chests anticipated in the Budget Estimate for 1891-92.

In Bengal the opium crop was again a poor one. The figures in the margin show the outturn of provision opium for the last eight years.

13. Salt.—The Revenue showed satisfactory improvement in all Provinces, except Madras. In Madras the consumption of salt increased as in other Provinces, but the unusually large cash sales in 1890-91 raised the receipts of that year to the prejudice of 1891-92: some allowance was made for this in framing the Budget Estimate for 1891-92, but it proved insufficient. The sales of salt in Bombay were exceptionally high, the revenue realised having exceeded the Budget Estimate of the year and the receipts of the preceding year by Rx. 226,608 and Rx. 163,832 respectively.

1891-92	Budget	8,343,500

14. Stamps and Excise.—The Stamp Revenue fell off in the closing months of 1890-91, and the revenue of that year was lower than that of the previous year, the decrease occurring under Court-fee Stamps; but the ground lost was more than made up in 1891-92. Except the small Provinces under the direct administration of the Government of India, all Provinces contributed to the increase, and notably Bengal. To the increase in the Excise Revenue also all Provinces contributed, with the one exception of the North-Western Provinces, where the revenue was less than the Budget Estimate, the increase being largest in Bengal.

16. Customs—Import Duties.—The revenue from Import Duties was about the same as in 1890-91, but fell short of the Budget Estimate by Rx. 36,519, the imports of spirits in some Provinces and the imports of petroleum in Bombay being less than anticipated.

Export Duties.—The receipts from Export Duties exceeded the Budget Estimate by Rx. 39,557, but were less than those of 1890-91 by Rx. 42,881. The exports of rice from Burma in 1890-91 were abnormally large.

17. Assessed Taxes.—The receipts increase with the growth of wealth and population.

18. Forest Revenue.—There was a satisfactory increase of Revenue in 1891-92 as compared with the previous year, but the Budget Estimate was not realised in consequence chiefly of the prevailing scarcity in Upper Burma, Madras, and Bombay.

		Rx.

20. Tributes.—Some arrears left outstanding in Burma at the end of 1890-91 were collected in 1891-92, and a refund of Rx. 5,000 anticipated in the Bombay Estimates was not paid and a portion of the Oodeypore tribute was not realised in the year.

DIRECT DEMANDS ON THE REVENUE.

21. Refunds.—The only point requiring notice under this uncertain head is that there were some special and unanticipated large refunds of Land Revenue in Bengal, the North-Western Provinces, the Punjab, and Madras.

1891-92	Budget	231,400
	Revised	250,200
	Accounts	254,353

22. Assignments and Compensations.—The capitalised value of certain annual remissions of revenue was paid during the year in the North-Western Provinces, and there were some arrear payments in both the North-Western Provinces and Madras. There was also a change of classification by which certain payments formerly shown as political pensions in Madras are now charged to this head.

	Accounts	1,531,860

23. Land Revenue.—The expenditure under this head increases in consequence of the growth of revenue and of improvements in the administration. Survey and Settlement charges are also increasing for a time. Of the total increase of Rx. 158,530 in the expenditure of 1891-92 over the preceding year, Rx. 37,776 occurred in Burma, Rx. 48,338 in Bengal, and Rx. 60,742 in Madras. More than half the total increase in Burma was in Survey and Settlement charges. In Bengal also the greater part of the excess was connected with Settlement operations in Government and temporarily settled estates. In Madras about half the total increase appeared under the charges for district administration, and the remainder was connected mainly with the revision of the remuneration of the local village establishments. The Budget Estimates proved too high, chiefly in the Central Provinces, Assam, and Bombay, but in Bengal the estimates for "Survey and Settlement" and other heads were too low.

		Rx.
1891-92	Budget	3,887,400
	Revised	3,833 200
	Accounts	3,835,126

24. Opium.—The variations occur in the cultivation and manufacturing charges, which depend on the outturn of the crop each season. As already stated in paragraph 12, there was again a failure of the opium crop for the third year in succession since 1888-89. By this the expenditure of the year is reduced, but the saving is to the detriment of the revenue of succeeding years.

		Rx.
1890-91	Accounts ...	2,180,797
1891 92	Budget	2,274,600
	Revised	1,886,200
	Accounts	1,801,813

25. Salt.—The Budget Estimate was closely followed, except in the charges for Preventive Establishments and Manufacture and Excavation in Northern India, the provision for which was not all required. The expansion of the operations of the Department accounts for the increase in the charges of 1891-92 over the previous year. Of the total increase of Rx. 30,021, Rx. 21,340 occurred in Madras and Rx. 10,191 in Bombay, there being, on the other hand, some small reductions in Bengal and Northern India.

	Revised	459,600
	Accounts	450,034

26. Stamps.—About half of the increase in the charges for 1891-92 as compared both with the Budget Estimate of the year and the actuals of the preceding year is explained by the fall in exchange.

		Rx.
1890-91	Accounts	130,019

As regards the remainder, the discount on sale of stamps increased with the growth of Revenue, and the Bombay charges for superintendence were enhanced by the deputation of the Assistant Superintendent of Stamps to England in connection with the prosecution for the theft of stamps from the S. S. Astræa.

27. Excise.—The extension of the tree-tax system in Madras, the entertainment of Naib Tehsildars in distilleries in the North-Western Provinces, and additions to distillery establishments in Bengal and Bombay are the chief causes of the increased expenditure as compared with 1890-91. The increases in the North-Western Provinces and Madras were not fully anticipated in the Estimates.

	Accounts	190,100

28. Provincial Rates, Customs, Assessed Taxes, and Registration.—The chief points requiring notice in connection with these figures are (1) that new establishments required for valuation and re-valuation work in Bengal increased the charges in that Province under Provincial Rates; and (2) that the District Registration charges were augmented in some Provinces owing to larger payments of commission on increased revenue.

		Rx.
1891-92	Budget	425,900
	Revised	430,100

29. Forest.—The variations under this head follow to some extent the variations under the corresponding Revenue head. The saving on the Budget Estimate of Rx 61,774 is distributed over nearly all the Provinces, and part of it is due to provision for the reorganisation of the Forest Staff in some Provinces not being utilized during the year.

INTEREST.

30. Revenue.—The receipts in 1891-92 were less than those in the preceding year by Rx. 51,607. There was a decrease in England of £107,728, equivalent, with exchange, to Rx. 136,643, and an increase in India of Rx. 85,036. On the other hand, the Budget Estimate was exceeded by Rx. 73,043, £28,466 in England, Rx. 13,689 under Exchange, and Rx. 30,888 in India. In England the amounts obtained by the investment of cash balances in 1890-91 were abnormally high; the receipts in 1891-92 were much lower, though they exceeded the Budget Estimate. In India the receipts are increasing with the yearly additions to the advances to Municipalities, Port Trusts, and cultivators. The points that require special notice are—(1) the currency investment was increased by Rx. 1,000,000 in accordance with the Notification in the Finance and Commerce Department, No. 4861, dated 3rd December 1891, and owing to this the receipts in 1891-92 were higher than 1890-91 by Rx. 31,143; and (2) there was a receipt in 1891-92 of Rx. 38,291 against Rx. 9,115 in 1890-91 on account of interest on overdrawn capital of Railway Companies. The estimate of receipts from loans to Municipalities, &c., in India was not fully realised.

31. Expenditure: Interest on Debt.—The reduction in the charges in India in 1891-92 as compared with the preceding year is connected with the conversion in 1890-91 of a portion of the 4½ % loans of 1878 and 1879 into 4 % paper. These conversion operations involved certain advance payments of interest and other charges in the year of conversion, and effected a permanent reduction in the charges of 1891-92 and subsequent years to the extent of one-half per cent. on the amount converted. The increase in the sterling payments is due to the new 3 % loan of £4,600,000 raised in 1891-92, and to the transfer to Government of the liability for the debentures and debenture stock of the South Indian Railway on its purchase by the State in 1890-91. The interest charged to Ordinary Debt in England included £254,353, being discount on the issue and sales in 1891-92 of £4,600,000 India 3 per cent. Stock; but, according to the usual practice, no provision was made for this in the Budget Estimate. On the other hand, £10,000 provided for interest on Temporary Loans was not required, and there were other savings owing to a portion of the loan of the year not having been raised so early as was expected.

32. Interest on other Obligations.—The interest on Savings Bank Deposits is the most important item under this head. Excluding the adjustment of interest, the net addition to these deposits in the year amounted to Rx. 517,904, and the payment of interest was Rx. 306,227 against Rx. 279,653 in 1890-91: the provision made in the Budget Estimate for the growth of the deposits and of the interest on them was smaller. On the other hand, the payments of the pensions and annuities which represent the interest on the special loans from the King of Oudh and on the 8 per cent. Madras perpetual loans were less than the amounts entered in the Estimates.

POST OFFICE, TELEGRAPH, AND MINT.

REVENUE.

33. Post Office.—The revenue in 1891-92 exceeded that of 1890-91 by Rx. 43,852. The real increase was less, because in 1891-92 a change was made in the method of dividing between England and India the postage on letters between the two countries: each country now retains the postage collected by it, and a sum of £19,900 is paid annually in England to the London Post Office and charged as expenditure in the Home Accounts, while the former practice was to adjust the similar payment by deduction from revenue in India. The improvement in Revenue is below the average of earlier years owing to a reduction in the rates of letter postage to the United Kingdom from 1st January 1891. The allowance made in the Budget Estimate for the reduction in the rates proved to be greater than was necessary; and the Revenue generally also increased more than was anticipated.

34. Telegraph.—The receipts in 1891-92 show an increase of Rx. 138,300 over those of 1890-91. Here also a change of procedure has caused the increase to appear larger than it is: the payments made in London to Telegraph Companies on account of message revenue under the joint purse arrangement, and as contribution to the Australasian message fund, instead of, as formerly, being deducted from receipts, are now shown as expenditure. Even after allowing for this the improvement in the year was much above the normal, the traffic, both foreign and internal, having expanded remarkably, and having much more than counterbalanced the diminution in revenue caused by the reduction in the transit rate for foreign messages from 75 to 35 centimes and the reduction in the tariff for messages from England to Australasia.

The following table compares the net receipts of the Telegraph Department for the last four years :

35. Mint.—The exceptionally heavy imports of silver to India in 1890-91 were followed by a reduction below the average of past years in the imports of 1891-92, and there was a consequent reduction in the seigniorage duty. The Budget Estimate assumed an average import.

EXPENDITURE.

36. Post Office.—The Expenditure increases with the Revenue and with the expansion of the Department. But the causes contributing to the specially large increase of Rx. 96,615 in 1891-92 as compared with 1890-91 were—(1) the payment in England to the London Post Office mentioned in paragraph 33 ; (2) the adjustment for the first time in 1891-92 as Post Office expenditure of the value of stationery supplied from Central Stores to the Postal Department and of printing done at Government presses for that Department ; and (3) the fall in the rate of exchange. No provision was made in the Budget Estimate for the printing and stationery charges, but the amount included in the Revised Estimate was too high.

37. Telegraph.—The charges exceed those in 1890-91 and the Budget Estimate by Rx. 74,740 and Rx. 46,320 respectively. These excesses are due chiefly to the adjustment as expenditure of the payments in England mentioned in paragraph 34 and to the fall in exchange.

CIVIL DEPARTMENTS.

REVENUE.

39. The increase over the actuals of 1890-91 appears chiefly under Courts of Law and Jails, due to enhanced receipts from general fees and fines and from Jail manufactures. The increase in the total would have been larger but for a special receipt in 1890-91 of £31,000 by the sale of the Royal Lunatic Asylum estate at Ealing. The Budget Estimate was exceeded notably under the heads Courts of Law, Police, Marine, and Scientific and other Minor Departments, the improvements having occurred respectively in magisterial fines, cattle pound receipts, Dockyard services, and Miscellaneous receipts in the Minor Departments on account of contributions, examination fees, and sale-proceeds of stores.

EXPENDITURE.

40. Administration.—About half the total differences between the actuals of 1891-92 and those of the preceding year and the Budget Estimate occur under Exchange. As regards the remainder, the Secretariat charges in India were higher owing partly to revision of establishments, and partly to increased telegram charges; and in England the charges for the management of enfaced Rupee Paper and for stores were higher than expected.

42. Law and Justice—Jails.—The Jail charges in 1891-92 were considerably higher than the previous year owing to an increase in jail population in some Provinces and to a rise in the price of food-grains. The saving on the Budget Estimate occurred mainly in the cost of jail manufactures.

43. Police.—The Budget Estimate provided for large expenditure in Bombay on a scheme for the reorganisation of the Police, but it was not brought into operation during the year. The expenditure in Upper and Lower Burma was also much over-estimated. The savings in Burma and Bombay aggregated Rx. 58,608, but they were counterbalanced to some extent by increased charges in the Lushai country.

Provision was made in the Budget Estimate for these items, and also for a vessel for the Baragua flats; but the construction of that vessel was not completed in the year, and consequently there was a saving on the Estimates.

In England the subsidy of £60,000 to the Admiralty for manning and maintaining the Indian Government Defence Vessels, for which provision was made in the Estimates, was not paid owing to delay in taking over the vessels, but the saving was counterbalanced to some extent by increased expenditure for stores.

45. Education, Ecclesiastical and Medical.—The efforts of Local Governments to meet more fully the growing wants of the people increase the expenditure under Education and Medical from year to year. The Medical Expenditure includes Rx. 57,400 on account of the cost of local establishments for clearing tanks and wells in Madras, which was shown under "32—Miscellaneous" in previous years and in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92.

47. Scientific and other Minor Departments.—The expenditure on the Census swelled the charges for 1891-92. The Survey charges, on the other hand, were less than in the previous year and in the Budget Estimate because of a change in the system of adjustment of Survey charges recoverable from Wards' estates and other bodies. Formerly, these recoverable items were adjusted in the first place as Government expenditure, and the repayments were deducted from the expenditure of the year in which they were made: they are now excluded from the Government expenditure from the beginning. The Revised Estimate for Census charges was too high.

In 1891-92 also there were some recoveries on the same account not foreseen when the estimates were framed. 53. Civil Furlough and Absentee Allowances.—The expenditure in 1890-91 was specially low, the temporary rise in the rate of exchange having induced officers to draw their allowances in India, as explained in paragraph 52 of the Resolution in this Department, No. 2159, dated 20th May 1892. On the other hand, the balance of Rx. 18,386 in the Manipur Treasury which was plundered during the disturbance in March 1891 was written off as lost in the accounts of 1891-92; there were increased payments for Municipal taxes on Government buildings in Bombay; and there was considerable expenditure on certain Commissions of Enquiry, namely, the Native Passengers Ships Commission, the Leprosy Commission, Police Organisation Commissions in Bengal and in the North-Western Provinces, the Malabar Marriage Bill Commission in Madras, and the Deccan Agriculturists' Relief Act Commission in Bombay.

FAMINE RELIEF AND INSURANCE.

57. In 1889-90 the improvement in the financial position enabled the Government of India partially to restore the Famine Insurance Grant, and the grant was raised in that year to Rx. 600,000, exclusive of the net charge on the Revenues on account of the Indian Midland and Bengal-Nagpur Railways, which is shown under the Railway Revenue Account. In 1890-91 the grant was maintained at the same amount. The net charge on account of the two Protective Railways constructed through the agency of Companies was Rx. 462,009 in 1889-90 and Rx. 482,351 in 1890-91, making the total grant for each of those years Rx. 1,062,009 and Rx. 1,082,351 respectively.

In 1891-92 the Famine Insurance Grant was raised to the full amount of Rx. 1,500,000, including the loss on the two Protective Railways. The first charges against the grant are (1) direct expenditure on Famine Relief; (2) the loss on the two Railways; and (3) the expenditure on the construction of Protective Irrigation Works: the balance is devoted to the construction of railways or to the Reduction of Debt. In the Budget Estimate that balance was taken at Rx. 975,000, and it was intended to spend the whole of that sum on the construction of railways. The direct expenditure on Famine Relief exceeded the Estimate by Rx. 20,423, and in the expenditure on Irrigation Works there was an excess of Rx. 12,931: on the other hand, the loss on the two Railways amounted to Rx. 231,681 instead of the Estimate of Rx. 457,000, and the amount spent on the construction of Railways in excess of the expenditure not charged against Revenue was Rx. 484,795 only instead of Rx. 975,000. To maintain the Famine Insurance Grant at the fixed amount, the sum of Rx. 682,170 was therefore charged in the accounts under Reduction of Debt.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAYS CHARGED AGAINST REVENUE IN ADDITION TO THAT UNDER FAMINE INSURANCE.

58. The net receipt in 1890-91 was due to certain recoveries from the Rohilkhund Railway Company mentioned in paragraph 57 of the review of last year. In 1891-92 the bulk of the expenditure was incurred on the Hyderabad-Umarkot Railway in Bombay, Rx. 117,221, and on the Mayavaram-Mutupet line in Madras, Rx. 42,662. Delay in the acquisition of land for the latter Railway impeded the progress of the work, and the full Budget Grant was not spent.

The annual increase in the open mileage and the ordinary development of traffic on new lines, such, for example, as the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, account for some portion of the improvements. But the main causes are an exceptionally heavy export traffic of wheat and seeds, an increased movement of food-grains owing to scarcity in certain parts of the country, an increased traffic of coal, and a large pilgrim traffic in Northern India connected with certain Hindu religious festivals.

The falling-off on the Eastern Bengal Railway is the result partly of a decline in jute traffic, and partly of heavy expenditure for renewals and in payment of compensation for goods lost and damaged in river flats burnt and sunk by an accident. On the Bengal North-Western Railway there was some reduction in earnings, but by far the greater part of the apparent deterioration was caused by the payment to the Company of its share of the net earnings for three half years in 1891-92. There were some heavy renewals on the Madras line.

60. Interest and Annuities.—The interest charges show a progressive increase with the construction of new railways. The speculative rise in the rate of exchange in 1890-91 accounts for the specially low expenditure in that year in the charge for exchange.

61. Other Expenditure.—The major part of this expenditure consists of payments of surplus profits to the guaranteed railways. These payments in 1891-92 exceeded those of the preceding year and of the Budget Estimate by Rx. 264,325 and Rx. 166,159 respectively as a consequence of the exceptional traffic obtained in the last few months of 1890-91 and in 1891-92. On the other hand, the grant for Miscellaneous Railway Expenditure was not fully spent; nor was the expenditure so high as in 1890-91. The recoveries from Railway Companies of their share of the cost of Government supervision, which are deducted from expenditure, were also higher than the actuals of the preceding year and than the Budget Estimates.

1891-92	315,800

A large portion of the interest charges being payable in sterling, the fluctuations in the rate of exchange have a very important effect on the figures just given. If the rate of exchange had not varied from that of 1886-87, the loss or gain would have been as under—

		Rx.
1887-88	Net loss	1,884,000
1888-89	Net loss	1,729,100
1889-90	Net loss	1,444,800
1890-91	Net loss	968,500
1891-92	Net gain	13,100

The expenditure on the Frontier Railways and the liabilities incurred in connection with the Bengal-Nagpur and Indian Midland Railways increased the loss considerably in 1887-88; but if the rate of exchange had not changed since 1886-87, the net loss would have decreased every year since 1887-88, and would have been converted into a net gain in 1891-92.

IRRIGATION.

MAJOR WORKS.

63. Net Earnings, excluding Land Revenue.—The increase was secured chiefly by the extension of irrigation from the canals in the Punjab and in the North-Western Provinces. Part of the increase in the Punjab was nominal, a change in the system of levying water rates in the Bari Doab Canal having caused certain receipts to be treated as direct Canal Revenue instead of as Land Revenue due to Irrigation. Some arrears were also recovered on the Midnapur and Sone Canals in Bengal.

64. Interest.—These charges increase with the progress in the construction of Irrigation Works. The additional outlay on the Chenab Canal and the Periyar Project mentioned in paragraph 74 accounts for the excess over the Estimate.

MINOR WORKS.

65. Receipts.—The increase is due mainly to the recovery of arrears of clearance rates on the Indus Inundation Canals in the Punjab.

66. Expenditure.—A considerable portion of the increase in 1891-92 is due to expenditure on Famine Relief Works in Rajputana, Upper Burma, and Madras. In Lower Burma also additional expenditure was incurred on the construction of a lock on the Kyaikto-Sittang Canal and in improving the Irrawaddy embankments threatened by river encroachment.

BUILDINGS AND ROADS.

67. Receipts.—The accounts of 1890-91 included the sale proceeds of the Customs House at Calcutta, Rx. 31,700. There was no such important special recovery in 1891-92, but there were increased receipts from the sale of some military buildings and from tolls on roads and ferries, and also from the Coopers Hill College in England.

68. Expenditure.—The Imperial expenditure exceeded that of 1890-91 and the Budget Estimate by Rx. 153,340 and Rx. 177,376 respectively. Special grants were made in the year for the restoration of buildings at Quetta damaged by rain, Rx. 37,200, for outlay on measures intended to facilitate the speedy mobilization of the Army in time of war, Rx. 61,600, and for buildings for the accommodation of the troops in the Chin Hills. Additional expenditure of considerable amounts was also incurred on Famine Relief Works in Rajputana and Upper Burma and for the Nichuguard-Manipur road in Assam.

As regards Provincial and Local charges, the quinquennial contracts with Provincial Governments made in 1887 having proved extremely favourable to them, the Local Governments had at their disposal considerable balances which they devoted largely to useful Public Works. The increase in Provincial expenditure as compared with 1890-91 was largest in the North-Western Provinces, where it was incurred in the construction of new roads in the Kumaon and Naini Tal Divisions and in the payment of large contributions for Municipal Water Works at Benares, Cawnpore, and Allahabad. Next in order came Madras, Bengal, Punjab, Central Provinces, and Lower Burma, in most of which the programme of Public Works was generally enlarged.

ARMY.

RECEIPTS.

69. The decrease in the receipts occurred mainly under Commissariat receipts owing to smaller issues of malt liquor and to the discontinuance of the employment of State agency for the supply of the liquor to British corps and batteries in Lower Burma.

EXPENDITURE.

70. India.—The accounts of 1890-91 included Rx. 760,000 for extra expenditure connected with Military expeditions and the occupation of Upper Burma. Provision was made in the Budget Estimate of 1891-92 for Rx. 557,000 on account of similar extra expenditure, but the actuals amounted to no less than Rx. 1,395,600. This large increase of Rx 838,600 over the Budget Estimate consisted mainly of additional expenditure connected with the Manipur expedition (Rx. 378,074), the Miranzai (Rx. 141,719), Chin-Lushai (Rx. 91,393), the Hazara (Rx. 47,246), and Wuntho (Rx. 45,257) expeditions, and the cold weather operations in Upper Burma (Rx. 94,775). Rx. 196,170 and Rx. 49,459 respectively were also spent on mobilisation arrangements and on the augmentation of transport, for which there was no provision in the Budget Estimate.

1891-92	Budget	14,565,500

Apart from the special expenditure mentioned above, there were increased charges in 1891-92 connected with the purchase, feed, and keep of additional horses and ordnance mules, and a rise in prices of food for men and animals.

The Revised Estimate did not provide sufficiently for the charges of the Chin-Lushai and Manipur expeditions or for the rise in prices of food and other Commissariat charges.

71. England and Exchange.—In England the excess of £119,388 over the expenditure of 1890-91 was made up of an increase in the effective charges of £65,950 and of £53,438 in the non-effective charges, the former being due to increased supplies of stores, and the latter representing a growth of the pension charges. The saving on the Budget Estimate is due mainly to smaller expenditure on Ordnance stores. Further, the Budget Estimate included an addition of £25,000 for deferred pay of British forces serving in India; but neither this amount nor a sum of £240,000 included in the Revised Estimate on account of arrears of effective Home charges of British forces serving in India were paid.

SPECIAL DEFENCE WORKS.

72. As in previous years, the grant for these works was not fully spent owing to delay in the supply of stores from England and in the progress of construction. About a quarter of the total savings on the Budget Estimate occurred in India, and three-quarters in England and Exchange. The lapses were, however, less than had been anticipated in framing the Revised Estimate.

CAPITAL EXPENDITURE.

73. Railways.—The expenditure in 1891-92 included Rx. 484,795 charged against Revenues under "Famine Relief and Insurance," the outlay on the construction of Railways and Irrigation Works not charged to Revenue being restricted to the prescribed limit of Rx. 3,500,000. The restoration of the Famine Insurance Grant to Rx. 1,500,000 from 1891-92 enabled Government to frame an enlarged Railway programme, but the expenditure was not so high as in the Estimates owing to the progress of construction having been less rapid than was hoped.

74. Irrigation.—The grant for these works was increased in the course of the year to secure the more rapid completion of the Chenab Canal and the Periyar Project. The additional amounts required were met from the savings in the grants for Capital Outlay on Railways.

In 1891-92 there was no such purchase; the expenditure in the previous year was incurred on the purchase of the South Indian Railway.
